THE 1509/1440

HISTORY

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OFTHE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

Written in French by the Abbot de Vertot, of the Royal Academy of Inscriptions, &c.

The FIFTH EDITION.

English'd by Mr. Ozell from the Original newly reprinted at Paris, with Amendments and Additions by the Author himself, in almost every Page: Besides not a few effential Alterations and Corrections in This Fourth Edition more than in any of the preceding ones, either French or Dutch.

VOLUME the FIRST.

To which is prefixed,

A Translation of a Memorial sent from London by the late Earl STANHOPE to the Abbot DE VERTOT at Paris, containing divers Questions relating to the Constitution of the Roman Senate. With the Abbot's Answer.

DUBLIN:

Printed by R. REILLY on Cork-Hill.

For GEO. GRIERSON, Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majesty, at the King's Arms and Two Bibles in Effex-Street, and
GEO. EWING, at the Angel and Bible in Dames-Street; Bookstellers, M DCC XXXVI.

ADVERTISEMENT

CONCERNING THE

Fourth EDITION of the Abbot de Vertot's ROMAN REVOLUTIONS, which this Fifth EDITION is printed from.

MO' this Edition of the Roman Revolutions does not contain above three or four Lines more than the last, yet the Alterations in it (and those material ones) are more than as many bundred; as will appear by turning over my inter-leav'd Books, now in the Proprietors Hands; and yet more by comparing this and the preceding Editions together: Because, besides those Corrections on the Inter-leaves which amount to some hundreds,

Advertisement, &c.

hundreds, and which I took from the last and best Edition in French, I have added in the Revises, many Emendations of my own, as to the Diction, &c.

In this Edition I chiefly had an eye to that of the Hague, 1727. Accordingly, the principal Persons Names are every-where distinguish'd from the rest by Capitals, for the readier finding out any Event.

In the Margin is added, by way of Lemma's a continual Index, which shews at once the Subject-matter of very-near every individual Page; and at the End is a much larger, and a more exact and compleat Table of Contents than any that hath yet appear'd; for it shews not only Persons Names, but also Places and Things; as likewise Words, Phrases, Actions and Speeches.

JOHN OZELL

Sarobert way

AN

Introductory DiscoursE.

*****************

The Foundation of the ROMAN Commonwealth, and the chief Causes of its Decay.

HE Love of Liberty was the first Motive that sway'd the Romans in the Establishment of the Republic, and the Cause or Pretence of those Revolutions we have undertaken to write the History of. It was this Love of Liberty that prescribed the Royalty, abridg'd the Authority of the Consulate, and upon certain Occasions suspended even the Title of it. The very Populace, to balance the Power of the Consuls, wou'd have particular Protectors chosen from out of their own Body; and these Plebeian Magistrates, under Pretence of guarding the Publick Liberty, raised themselves by degrees to be the Directors of the Laws, and Inspectors over the Senate and the Nobility.

These State-Inquisitors kept in awe the Confuls themselves and the Generals. We shall find in the Course of this History, that they often obliged them, when their Office was expired, to answer for their Administration, and the Success of their Arms, before the Affembly of the People. To conquer was not enough; the Glory of the greatest Victories could not shelter the General from their Enquiries, if he had not been sufficiently careful of the Lives of his Soldiers, or during the Campaign had treated them too imperiously: They expected he should know how to join the Dignity of the Commander with the Modesty of the Citizen. Qualifications too shining were even suspected, in a State where Equality was look'd upon as the Foundation of the public Liberty. The Romans were jealous of the Virtues they could not help admiring; and those fierce Republicans cou'd not bear even to be ferved with superior Talents, that might have the least Prospect of subjecting them.

Those that were guilty of using unworthy Methods to gain the Consulate were for ever excluded from it. All Offices and Employments, except the Censorship, were only

Annu-

An Introductory DiscouRsE.

Annual. A Conful, at the Expiration of his Confulate, retain'd no more Authority than what his Personal Merit gave him: And after having commanded the Armies of the Republic in chief, he was often seen to serve in those very Armies under his Successor. He cou'd not enjoy the Confulate again, 'till after an Interval of Ten Years; and that great Dignity was hardly ever left too long in the same Family, for fear the Government might insensibly grow Hereditary.

But of all the Precautions which the Romans made use of to preserve their Liberty, none is more worthy of Admiration, than that Adherence which they a long time kept to the Poverty of their Ancestors: That Poverty which, in the first Inhabitants of Rome, was meerly the Effect of Necessity, became a Political Virtue in their Successors. The Romans thought it the furest Guardian of Liberty; nay, they found ways to make it honourable, that it might be a Bar against Luxury and Ambition. This Contempt of Riches in private Men grew to be a Maxim of Government: A Roman gloried in continuing in his Poverty, at the same time that he daily exposed his Life to increase the public Treasure. Every Man thought himself sufficiently wealthy in the Riches of the State; and the Generals, as well as the common Soldiers, received their Subfiftance only from their own little Patrimos ny which they cultivated with their own Hands: Gaudebat Tellus vomere Laureato.

B 2

The first Romans were all Husbandmen, and the Husbandmen were all Soldiers; their Habit was coarse, their Food plain and frugal, their Labour constant: They bred up their Children in this hard way, to make them the more robust, and the more capable of enduring the Fatigues of War. But under their rustick Outside lay an incomparable Valour, great Elevation and Nobleness of Sentiments; Glory was their only Passion, and they placed it in the Defence of their Liberty, and making themselves Masters of that of their Neighbours.

Some modern Writers, who cannot bear fuch Virtues in the Ancients, pretend that we make a Merit of the Rudeness of these first Romans, and that they despited Riches only because they knew not the Value and Conveniencies of them.

To remove this Objection, we need only cast our Eyes upon the Course of this History, and we shall see that in the fifth and sixth Ages after the Foundation of Rome, at the very time when the Republic was Mistress of all Italy, and of Part of Sicily, Spain, Gaul, and Africa it self, they still took their Generals from the Plough: Attilii manus rustico opere attritæ salutem publicam stabilierunt. What Glory to a State to have Captains able to conquer great Provinces for her, and so disinterested as to preserve their Poverty in the midst of their Conquests!

V. M. l. 4. Cic. pro. Rofcio. Pl. l. 18. c. 3.

I.do

I do not speak of the sumptuary Laws that Macr. were in force in the fixth Century, which without any distinction of Birth, Fortune, or Dignity, regulated the Expence of every Citizen. Nothing escaped the wise Legislators that established those severe Rules; every thing is fettled by them, as well in Drefs, as in the Expence of the Table, the Number of Guests at Feasts, and even the Charges of Funerals. Read the Lex Oppia; you will fee that it forbids the Roman Ladies Paul. wearing Habits of feveral Colours, having Man. Ornaments about their Dress exceeding the Sumpt. Value of half an Ounce of Gold, and being carried in a Chariot with two Horses within a Mile of Rome, unless to affift at some Sacrifice. The Lex Orchia fixed the Number of Guests that a Man might invite to a Feaft; And the Lex Phannia forbad spending at it above a Hundred affes, centenos æris; which amounted to about fifty Pence of our Money. Laftly, The Lex Cornelia fettled the utmost Sum which might be spent at a Funeral, at a yet more moderate Rate: Regulations, which tho' they may feem beneath the Greatness and Power to which the Romans had even then attained, yet by banishing Luxury out of private Families, were the Strength and Safety of the Commonwealth.

By means of this voluntary Poverty, and a laborious Life, the Republic bred in her Bosom no Men but what were strong, roB 2 bust.

buft, full of Valour, and who expecting nothing from one another, did by a mutual Independence, preserve the Liberty of their Country. It was these illustrious Husbandmen, that in less than Three Hundred Years fubdu'd the most warlike Nations in Italy, defeated prodigious Armies of Gauls, Cimbri, and Teutones, and broke the formidable Power of Carthage.

But after the Destruction of that Rival of Rome, the Romans, invincible abroad, funk beneath the Weight of their own Greatness, Lucan. 1. 1.

- Ipsa nocet Moles.

Luxury and the Love of Riches came into Rome with the Treasures of the conquered Provinces; and that Poverty and Temperance, which had form'd fo many great Captains, fell into Contempt, Ibid.

- Fæcunda virorum Paupertas fugitur .-

And what is most furprizing is, fays Velleius Paterculus, that it was not by Degrees, but all at once, that this vast Alteration happened, and the Romans ran headlong into Vel. Pat. Luxury and Effeminacy: Sublata Imperii Æmula, non gradu sed præcipiti cursu à virtute descitum, ad vitia transcursum. Pleasure fucceeded in the room of Temperance; Idleness

1. z.

ness took place of Labour, and private Regards extinguish'd that Zeal and Vehemence which their Ancestors had shew'd for the Interest of the Public.

And indeed one wou'd take it to be another Nation which is now going to appear upon the Stage; a general Corruption foon spread it felf thro' all Degrees in the State: Justice was publickly fold in the Tribunals; the Voices of the People went for the highest Bidder; and the Confuls, after having obtained that great Post by Intrigues, or by Bribery, never now went to War but to enrich themselves with the Spoils of Nations, and often to plunder those very Provinces which their Duty bound them to defend and protect.

Hence came the immense Wealth of some Generals. Who wou'd believe that Crassus, a Roman Citizen, shou'd be Master of above feven Thousand Talents? I omit the Trea-10500000 fures that Lucullus brought from Afia, and Livres. Julius Casar from Gaul. The former at his Return built himself Palaces, and lived in them with a Magnificence and Delicacy, that the ancient Kings of Perfia wou'd have found it hard to imitate; and Cæfar, more ambitious, besides enriching a great Number of Officers and Soldiers by Politic Liberalities, had still enough to corrupt the Chief Men in Rome, and to buy out the Liberty of his Country.

The Provinces were obliged to supply these prodigious Expences. The Generals, under colour of subfifting their Troops, possessed themselves of the Revenues of the Commonwealth: And the State was weaken'd, in proportion as its Members became more powerful.

Besides the ordinary Tribute, the Governors daily exacted new Sums, either by the Name of Prefents, at their Entrance into the Province, or by way of Loan. Nay, oftentimes they car'd for no Pretence at all. It was colour fufficient for rifling the People, and laying new Imposts, if they did but give those Exactions a new Name: Cujus modo rei Bell. Civ. nomen reperiri poterat, boc satis esse ad cogendas pecunias. And what was still more insupportable, to get ready Money, they gave the Collection of these extraordinary. Tributes to Publicans, who to make themselves amends for having advanced their Cash, laid a double Load upon the Provinces, and by enormous Usuries confumed the Revenues of the following Year.

Cæfar de - 3.

> All these Riches flow'd to Rome. Rivers of Gold, or to speak more properly, the purest Blood of the People ran thither from all the Provinces, and carried along with it the most terrible Luxury. There arose of a sudden, and as it were by Inchantment, magnificent Palaces, whose Walls, Roofs and Cielings were all gilded. It was not enough for their Beds

and

and Tables to be of Silver; that rich Metal must also be carved or adorned with Basso Relievos, perform'd by the most excellent Artists.

Unde nefas tantum Latiis Pastoribus!

Juv. Sat.

It is Seneca that informs us of this surprizing Change in the Manners of the Romans, and who being himself worth seven Millions of Gold, was not ashamed to leave us those excellent Discourses upon Poverty, which all the World admires in his Writings. By what Rule of Philosophy, cried Suillius, has Seneca in four Years Favour acquired above seven Millions of Gold? He upbraided him, that his chief Study was to run after Wills, to take as in a Net those that were without Children, and to fill Italy and the Provinces with his Uluries: Qua Sapientia, quibus Philosophorum Tacit. præceptis, intra quadriennium Regiæ Amici-Ann. lib. tia, ter millies sestertium paravisset? Roma 13. Testamenta & Orbos velut indagine ejus capi. Italiam & Provincias immenso fænore bauriri.

All the Money in the State was in the Hands of some Great Men, the Publicans, and certain Freed-men richer than their Pa-Dion. trons. Every Body knows that the stately Cass. It is Amphitheatre which was called after the Name of Pompey, and would hold Forty Thousand People, was built at the Cost of Demetrius, who was his Freed-man: Quem non Senec. de puduit, says Seneca, locupletiorum esse Pompeio. Tranq. Anim. e.

Pallas, 8.

Pallas, another Freed-man, and as rich as Seneca, for refufing a Present from the Emperor Claudius, his Master, received the solemn Praises of a full Senate, and was compared to those ancient Romans before-mentioned, so famous for their Difinterestedness. Nay, it was thought worth while to preserve the Memory of his Refusal by an Inscription dedicated by Flattery. There is upon the Way of Tibur, says Pliny, a Monument with these Words; The Senate decreed Pallas the Ornaments of the Prætorship, and a Hundred and Fifty Thousand great Sesterces. But be refused the Money, and was satisfied with the Honours Tac. Ann. and Distinctions belonging to that Dignity. Et fixum est publico Senatus-consultum quo libertinus sesterium ter millies possessor, antiquæ Parfimoniæ laudibus cumulabatur.

Plin. 1. 7. Great Moderation indeed in a Freed-man Ep. 29. worth feven Millions of Gold, to be fatisfied with the Ornaments of the Prætorship! But what Shame to Rome, to see a Fellow just got out of the Chains of Servitude, appear, says Pliny, with the Fasces! he that formerly left his Village with his Feet naked and whitened with the Chalk with which Plin. 1. 35. they mark'd the Slaves: Unde cretatis pedibus C. penult. advenisset!

I should write a Book instead of a Preface, if I entered into the Particulars of the Roman Luxury, and went about to represent the Magnificence of their Buildings, the Richness of their Habits, the Jewels they they wore the prodigious Number of Slaves, Freed-men, and Clients, by whom they were constantly attended, and especially the Expence and Profusion of their Tables.

In the Time even of the Republick, they Panegyr. were not contented, fays Pacatus, if in the Theod. very Depth of Winter the Falernian Wine that was fill'd out to them was not strow'd with Roses, and cooled in Vessels of Gold in Summer. They valued the Feast only according to the Costliness of the Dishes that were served up. The Birds of the Phasis (Pheasants) must be fetch'd for them thro' all the Dangers of the Sea; and to compleat their Corruption, after the Conquest of Asia, they began to introduce Women-Singers and Dancers into their Entertainments.

The young Men chose Them for the Objects of their foolish Passion. They curled their Hair after Their Manner, affected to imitate the very Sound of their Voice, and their lascivious Gate, and excell'd those infamous Women in nothing but Vice and Esfeminacy. Capillum frangere, & ad mulie-Sen. Rhet. bres blanditias vocem extenuare, mollitie cor-Controv. poris certare cum fæminis, & immundissimis se excolere munditiis nostrorum Adolescentium Specimen est.

And accordingly Julius Cæsar, who very well knew the false Delicacy of those effeminate Youths, commanded his Soldiers in the Battel of Pharsalia, instead of darting their

Flo. 1. 4. Javelins at a Distance, to push them directly at the Face: Miles faciem feri. And it happened, as that Great Man foresaw, the young Fellows excessively fond of their own Beauty, turned their Backs and sled, for fear of being disfigured with Wounds and Scars.

What Defenders of Liberty! What an O-men of approaching Slavery! None cou'd be greater than to see Valour less regarded in a State than Luxury; to see the poor Officer languishing in the obscure Honours of a Legion, while the Grandees concealed their Cowardise, and dazzled the Eyes of the Public by the Magnificence of their Enquipage, and the prodigality of their Expence.

Lucan.

Luxuria incubuit victumque ulciscitur Orbem.

A Luxury so general soon wasted the Wealth of private Men. To supply their Extravagance, after having sold their Houses and Lands, they by base Adoptions and scandalous Alliances made Sale of the illustrious Blood of their Ancestors; and when they had nothing else to sell, they made Money of their Liberty. The Magistrate, as well as the private Citizen, Officer and Soldier, transferred their Obedience wherever they thought 'twou'd turn to most Advantage. The

The Legions of the Commonwealth became the Legions of the Great Men, and of the Heads of Parties: And these, to engage the Soldiers more strictly to their Fortune, wink'd at his Rapine, and neglected the Military Discipline to which their Ancestors owed their Conquests, and the Republic its Glory.

Luxury and Softness were spread from the City quite thro' the Camp. Whole Crouds of Servants and Slaves, with all the Equipage of Voluptuousness, follow'd the Army, almost an Army themselves. Casar, when he forced Pompey's Camp in the Plains of Pharfalia, found the Tables spread as for so many Feafts. The Side-Boards, fays he, De Bell. bent beneath the Load of Plate both Gold Civ. 1. 3. and Silver; the Tents were raised upon fine Green Turf; and some (as particularly that of Lentulus) for the Sake of Coolness, were shaded with Boughs and Ivy. In a Word, on the Side he had forced he faw Luxury and Debauchery, and Murder and Carnage in those Parts where the Fight still continued: Alibi prælia & vulnera, alibi popinæ, fi- Tacit. mul cruor & strues corporum, juxta scorta & scortis simile.

Is it any Wonder that Men who gave themselves up to Pleasure in the very midst of Danger, and exposed themselves to Danger only to supply the Expence of their Pleasure, shou'd see their Liberty buried in the Fields of Pharsalia? Whereas so long as that Liberty, so dear to the first Romans,

mans, was guarded by Poverty and Temperance; Love of their Country, Valour, and all the other Virtues both Civil and Military, were found always to attend it.

Claud. de Bell. Gild: Ad veteres fines, & mænia pauperis Anci.

A

A

MEMORIAL

Sent from LONDON to the

Abbot DE VERTOT at Paris,

By the late

Earl STANHOPE,

Principal Secretary of State.

ONSIEUR the Abbot de Vertot is defired to communicate to some Persons, whom his History of the Roman Revolutions have render'd curious in every Thing relating to the ancient Government of that Republic, his Thoughts upon a Point which seems not sufficiently cleared up by those Moderns that have treated of the Roman Constitution.

The Question is, What was the ordinary and regular Method of Admission into the Senate, in the four or five first Ages of the Commonwealth?

It is certain, that in the remotest Times of that State, the Dignity of Consul, and perhaps afterwards wards even that of Prætor or others, gave those who had been invested with them, the Right of fitting in the Senate during Life.

We are fensible, that in the first Ages there were none but Patricians in the Senate: But we wou'd fain know exactly by what Rule, or by what Authority some Patricians were Senators, while a great many other Patricians did not partake of that Honour. Was it from any Right of Succession, or Primogeniture? Or had the Cenfors, and before the Establishment of that Magistracy, the Consuls, the Prerogative of nominating fuch Patricians as they pleased, to fill the Places which became vacant in the Senate?

We find, that after the fecond Punick War, a Distator was created to fill up the Senate, which was very much exhausted: But this Fact, instead of refolving our Doubts in this Particular, only increases them; for we might from thence infer, that the Romans had no common and regular Method of supplying the Vacancies in the Senate, fince they had Recourse to the extraordinary Power of a Distator.

If any Man in this Age is capable, not only of folving these Doubts, but also of giving the Public just Notions in every thing relating to the Rights and Prerogatives of the Senate, and the Patrician Order, it must be the learned and polite Author of the Roman Revolutions.

Thoughts so on bull in which the notes and good T cleared up by tifole Moderns that have themed

Andrew to The Stanhope's Memorial and been no Appeal in the since of Physo an

THE

ANSWER

TOTHE

MEMORIAL.

PARIS, Decemb. 1. 1719.

Am ask'd my Opinion upon divers Questions relating to the Constitution of the Roman Senate; and a Frenchman is applied to for the Solution of Difficulties, started in a Nation which still retains some Footsteps of the ancient Government of the first Romans; and which, consequently, ought to be better acquainted therewith. Besides, who can have a more compleat Knowledge both of the Civil and Military Discipline of those famous Republicans than the learned and able Minister, and withal the Great Captain that does me the Honour to propose these Questions to me; he from whose Judgment

there had been no Appeal in the time of Varro and Tully themselves?

In the Memorial sent to me, the first Question is, What was the ordinary and regular Method of Admission into the Senate in the four or five first Ages of the Commonwealth.

Secondly, Why, the Senate confisting then of none but Patricians, we read of some Patricians that were Senators, while others were only private Men, and did not partake of that Dignity? And whether this Distinction came by Succession and Primogeniture, or whether the Choice of the Candidates lay wholly in the Consuls, and afterwards in the Censors.

Lastly, For what Reason, after the second Punic War, a Dictator was named on purpose to fill up the Vacancies in the Senate; from whence, you'll say, one might inser, that the Romans had no common and regular Way of supplying those Vacancies, since they had Recourse to the extraordinary Power of a Dictator?

Tho' the Author of the Memorial places his Doubts in the four or five first Ages of the Commonwealth, they do not seem to us to reach so far; but they can hardly be cleared up, without going back to the very Foundation of Rome, and the first Establishment of the Senate.

Rome, like most other States, did more than once change the Form of her Government. At first, as every body knows, she was govern'd by Kings. The Consuls succeeded those Princes, tho' with a limited Authority. And afterwards, about the 311th Year of Rome, the Censorship was created, and was a Limb cut off from the Consulate: And it is to these Three Epocha's, that we shall refer all that concerns the Creation of the first Senators, and the Nomination of their Successors.

If we will believe the greater Number of Historians, it was first the Kings, and afterwards the Confuls and Censors, that disposed of the vacant Places in the Senate. According to other Authors, the People's People's Votes were necessary in this Promotion; and, which adds to the Perplexity, this Diversity of Opinion is found not only in different Historians, but oftentimes the same Writer seems to contradict himself in different Parts of his Work. This is apt to breed a kind of Pyrrhonism, which is not easily thrown off, unless we are particularly attentive to the several Points of Time. There is no way but by taking a View of the different Epocha's of the Government, to form a just Notion of the several Methods by which at several times a Roman Citizen, whether Patrician, Knight or Plebeian, attained the

Romulus, fays Livy, finding his State did not want

Dignity of Senator.

Forces, was refolved to establish a Council that might direct their Operations, and to be in a manner the Basis of the Constitution, and the Pole upon which the whole Government should turn. In this View, he created a Hundred Senators, quum, jam virium Liv. t. baud pæniteret, consilium deinde viribus parat, centum Dec. 1. creat Senatores. So that according to that Historian, it was the first King of Rome that created the Senate. Plutarch, in that Prince's Life, ascribes the Establishment of that Society to him in the fame manner. Dionysius Halicarnasseus at first does not seem averse to the Opinion of those two Historians Romulus, fays he in his Second Book, refolved to form a Council of a Hundred Senators, to share with him the Cares of the Administration. But he adds afterwards, that this Prince only named the first Senator, who, in his Absence, was to preside in the Senate, and command in the City; that he order'd the Three Tribes, whereof the State then confifted, to chuse each of them three Senators; and that by vertue of a fecond Command of the same Prince, the thirty Curia, which made up those Three Tribes, named each three more; which, with the Senator named by the King, made just a hundred Senators. We fee 'tis the King alone that forms that Defign of creating a Senate; it is he that names the President or Prince of that Body of his OWN own Authority; and the Tribes and Curiæ elect the other Ninety nine Senators, it is only in Confequence of the express Order and Command of Romulus.

We find the same Opinion again in another Part of the fame Book; and when Romulus and Tatius the Sabine added a Hundred new Patricians to the Senate. the Choice of those Senators, according to that Historian, was left wholly to the Curia, and to the Plurality of Voices. That Writer does, indeed, add, that after the Election, it was the two Princes, the Roman and the Sabine, that admitted those new Magistrates into the Senate; which shews, notwithstanding Dionysius's Prejudice, that let there be what Election there would, it was the Authority of the Sovereigns that made it valid; much as it is in England, where the Bills propos'd by the House of Commons, and approved by the Lords, do not yet acquire the Force of Laws till they have the Confent of the Prince. And accordingly when any Historian of that Nation ascribes to any of their Kings the Establishment of a Law, we are always to take it for granted, that the Parliament's Confent was previous to the Promulgation thereof.

But to return to our Subject: We may observe that Livy, in all his Accounts of the Reigns of the Roman Kings, appears a thorough Royalist, if we may use the Expression. Dionysius Halicarnasseus, on the contrary, a Republican under the very Royalty it felf, does, in many Parts of his History, make the Kings of Rome merely the Heads of the Senate. If we confult the Latin Historian for the manner in which the principal Men of the Town of Alba, after its Destruction, were admitted into the Senate, it was the King, according to that Author, Tullus Hostilius. that open'd them the Gates; Principes Albanorum, (fays he) in patres, ut ea quoque pars Reipublicæ crefceret, legit; and he fet apart a Temple to ferve as a Palace or Place of Assembly for that Body, which he had now augmented, templumque ordini ab se au-

80 curiam fecit.

If, on the contrary, we cast our Eyes upon the Greek Historian, we shall find that the King affembles the Senate, gathers their Suffrages; and that there the Resolution is taken of demolishing the City of Alba, removing the Inhabitants to Rome, and admitting Seven of the principal Families into the Senate: All this is determin'd in a public Deliberation, wherein the Prince seems to have had no more than his single Voice, like the rest. The Romans have decreed it, says that Prince, speaking to the Albans, to inform them of what had been agreed upon touching the Destruction of their City.

Livy never varies from his Character all through his Account of the Government of the Kings. Those Princes determine solely and absolutely concerning every thing that relates to the Senate. When Tarquin the Ancient, contrary to Custom, brings into it a hundred Plebeians; the Latin Historian tells us directly, that this Innovation was the Prince's own doing; and that those hundred Plebeians were admitted into the Senate only by his Favour; centum in patres legit, qui deinde minorum gentium sunt appellati: And he adds, fastio haud dubia Regis, cujus beneficio in cu-riam venerant.

The fame Historian, after having related the ill Designs of Tarquin the Proud, the Grandson of the Prince just mention'd, and all the Engines he set at work to usurp the Crown, which was then upon the Head of Servius Tullius, fays expresly, that he endeavour'd to gain over those new Senators, which Tarquin the Ancient, his Grandfather, had admitted into the Senate; and that to draw them to his Side, he put them in mind, that they held their Dignities wholly of his Family; and that now they ought to flew him their Acknowledgment; admonere paterni beneficii & pro eo gratiam repetere: An Acknowledgment which he wou'd have had no Title to expect, if their Admission into the Senate had depended upon the Voices of the Multitude; and Tarquin the Ancient

Ancient had had only his fingle Vote in that Election, like the rest of the Senators.

That Prince, or to speak more truly, that Tyrant, after having possessed himself of the Throne, in the manner which every body knows; put to death, or banished, such Senators as he was apprehensive of, either upon account of their Power or Wealth: And he wou'd not fill up their Places, fays Livy, to the end that the Society might fall into Contempt by their Fewnels; numero immunito, says he, statuit nullos in patres legere, quo contemptior paucitate ipsa ordo effet: So that the Nomination of the Senators appears, by him, to have lain in that Prince. Dionyfius Halicarnasseus does indeed differ here from Livy; for after relating the same Fact, and the Death or Banishment of a great many Senators, he fays directly, that Tarquin did fill their Places with his own Creatures, and in a manner made up with them a new Senate. But notwithstanding the Contrariety of the Facts, nothing appears in either of them in Derogation of the Right and Prerogative of Kings: And whether Tarquin wou'd not substitute other Senators in the Room of those he had flain or exiled, as Livy relates it; or whether he supplied their Places with his Adherents, as Dionysius Halicarnasseus tells us: Still in both Historians mention is made of the Prince's Authority only; and that is all we wanted, as to the Nomination of the Senators.

Lastly, Livy confirms his Opinion in the Speech which he puts into the Mouth of a certain Tribune of the People, named Canuleius, who was for revoking one of the Laws of the Twelve Tables, which forbad all Alliance between the Patricians and the Plebeians. That Tribune upbraids the former with being descended most of them from Albans or Sabines: You do not owe your Nobility, says he, to your Origin; but to your Ancestors having been admitted into the Senate, either by the Choice of our Kings, or by the Will and Pleasure of the People, fince

fince their Expulsion; aut ab Regibus lecti, aut post Re-

ges exactos, jussu populi,

That Tribune, or the Historian that fpeaks for him, distinguishes two Æras, and two different Methods of Election. He fays, that during the Reigns of the Kings, those Princes disposed of the Places in the Senate, aut ab Regibus lecti; and at the fame time he maintains, that after the Expulsion of the Kings, that Right devolved to the People: But this last Proposition is not without great Difficulties, as we shall shew.

We are now come to the Establishment of the Commonwealth, which the Author of the Memorial makes the Date and Beginning of his Doubts: The Question is, fays he, What was then the common and regular Method of Admission into the Senate? If we will believe Livy, in the Paffage above quoted, the Suffrages of the People determined it, juffu' populi. Cicero, fo well vers'd in the Laws and Usages of his own Country, declares himself of the same Opinion: Twas, fays he, the whole Body of the People that made Choice of those who shou'd fit in that supreme Council, deligerentur in id Consilium ab universo po- Orat. pro pulo. Here indeed we have the Right of this Electi- Sextio. on ascribed wholly to the People, by the Testimony of the two most celebrated Writers in the Republic; but unluckily the Facts and Examples are directly contrary to this Notion; and what is most fingular, Livy himself furnishes us with most of those Examples, without faying any thing to leffen the Credit of the Facts he relates, and without fo much as mentioning the Rights of the People.

We read in that Historian, that after the Expulfion of the Kings, and Collatinus's Abdication of the Confulship, Brutus, then fole Conful, finding the Senate confiderably diminished by Tarquin's Cruelties, fill'd it with new Members, and increased the Number of the Fathers to three hundred; which we are told he chose out of the Order of Knights. So that we fee it was not the Commons that named the Se4

nators

nators in the first Age of the Commonwealth. Here is the first Consul that ever the Romans had, and then without a Collegue, exercising this Power without Opposition or Contradiction: Cadibus, says Livy, diminutum Patrum numerum ad trecentorum summam explevit. We are now to reconcile this Passage in Livy's first Book with the Speech of Canuleius the Tribune, which we find in the fourth of the first Decad.

Dionystus Halicarnasseus, who almost constantly relates the same Facts, but with different Circumstances, fays, that even at the time of this Promotion, Valerius was Brutus's Collegue; and he adds, that those two Consuls took the new Senators out of the Body of the People, pracipuos ex plebe allegerunt. Plutarch relates the same Fact after a third manner; he affirms, that Valerius was then fole Conful; and that for fear his future Collegue might hinder him in the Execution of the Delign he had laid, he made hafte to name the Senators that shou'd fill the vacant Places in the Senate: But tho' these three Historians differ in the Circumstances of the Fact, we find nothing in them in favour of the Rights of the People. The Conful is still the Person that makes the Nomination; and as to the main of the Question, it is indifferent whether that Conful's Name is Brutus or Valerius.

It is very probable that the Confuls, who succeeded the Kings in the Sovereign Power, Regio imperio duo funto, who had all the Ensigns of it, the Lictors, the Robe bordered with Purple, the Curule Chair, and the Sceptre or Staff of Ivory; that those great Magistrates, I say, the Heads of the Senate, and natural and rightful Generals of the Armies, and who, indeed, differed from the Kings in nothing, but that their Authority was divided, and only annual, succeeded to the Right those Princes enjoy'd, of supplying the Vacancies in the Senate.

But these Confuls being afterwards too much taken up with Wars Abroad, which often kept them from

Rome ;

Rome; the Right of nominating the Senators fell from the Consuls to the Censors, a new Magistracy created the 311th Year of Rome, only sixty six Years after the Establishment of the Commonwealth.

We are told, that these new Magistrates were at first set up only for taking the Number of the Roman People, which was then called the Census, a Custom instituted by King Servius Tullius. But as Authority naturally feeks to enlarge it felf, the Cenfors by infensible degrees assumed to themselves the Reformation of the three Orders of the Commonwealth, and afterwards they engroffed the Right of nominating the Senators, and even of expelling from the Senate fuch as they thought unworthy of their Seats; of taking away the Horse and Gold Ring from fuch Knights as had not done their Duty, and of degrading into the lower Tribes, fuch of the People who led irregular Lives. History is full of Instances of this Authority in the Censors, who by a wholesome Terror, restrained the several Orders of the State within the Bounds of their Duty. We shall not enter farther into the various Functions of this great Office, which was looked upon among the Romans, as the Pinacle of all the Honours a Citizen cou'd arrive at; but keep to the Question proposed, It appears then to me, by all that I can find in the Historians of that Nation, that the Censors succeeded the Confuls in the Nomination of the Senators, as the Confuls before fucceeded the Kings in the fame Prerogative: But whether those Princes, or those Magistrates, made that Nomination without the Concurrence of the People; or whether the People themfelves elected the Senators, as they did their other Magistrates, is what we shall be better able to judge of by what we are going to produce, in order to reconcile two Opinions that feem fo opposite.

Paulus Manutius pretends, that the Kings, the Consuls, and the Censors, had indeed the Right of proposing to the Assembly of the People such as they thought worthy to fill the Vacancies in the Senate; but that the Election of them lay in the People, whose Votes were however confined to those whom their Magistrates had proposed to them; a Conjecture fo much the weaker, as it is supported by no one Proof: Unless we will allow the Republic's Custom, of admitting no Magistrate but by the way of Election, to be a Proof. Not but that the People may in fome manner be faid to have opened the Doors of the Senate to those who were raised to the Curule Magistracies by their voices; because those great Dignities not only gave a Seat in the Senate to those who enjoyed this during the Year, but they also still retained it, even after their Office was expired; and the Cenfors, when they filled the vacant Places in the Senate, were obliged to inscribe them first, and each according to his Rank, in the Roll of the Senators. And perhaps it may be of this particular Part of the People's Privilege, that we are to understand what Canuleius and Cicero have left us, in Terms too general, of the People's Power in the Nomination of the Senators.

Thus the Dictator, M. Fabius Buteo, in the Second Punic War, in an extraordinary Emergency, when he was obliged to perform the Function of Censor, after having called the ancient Senators each by Name, did appoint to supply the Places of the Dead, first, says Livy, such as since the Censorship of L. Æmilius and C. Flaminius had held any Curule Dignity, and had not yet been inserted in the Roll of Senators, though their Offices gave them Admission into the Senate: Recitato vetere Senatu, inde primum in mortuorum locum legit qui post L. Æmilium & C. Flaminium Censores, Curulem magistratum cæpissent, nec dum in senatum lesti essent, &c.

But from this very Example, fays the Author of the Memorial, and from the Cenforship of a Distator, we may inferr that the Romans had no common and regular Method of supplying the Vacancies in the Senate, since they had Recourse to the extraordinary Power of a Distator.

We

1. l. 3. C.

Answer to Earl Stanhope's Memorial.

We may answer, * that on the contrary, this Example being extraordinary and fingular, is the very Reason why nothing can be inferred from it, against the Power of the Censors alone to name the Senators. Can any man affirm with the least Foundation, that it was not a common and regular Cufrom in the Republick, to chuse the Tribunes of the People only out of the Body of the Plebeians, because upon one single Occasion, under the Consulship of L. Valerius, and M. Horatius, we find in the Tribuneship Sp. Tarpeius, and A. Haterius, both Patricians, old Senators, and even Confulars, whom the Senate had politicly got into that Office, to cross the ill Designs of the other Tribunes, duos etiam Patricios, fays Livy, Consularesque, Sp. Tar- Liv. Dec.

peium & Aulum Heterium cooptavere.

It is certain there is no state so strongly attached 65. to its Form of Government, but in some certain Conjunctures it is forced to bear with feveral Alterations. Such was then the Cafe with the Roman Commonwealth: Four great Defeats, receiv'd from the Carthaginians, had exausted the best of her Blood. They particularly, fays Livy, bewailed the Loss of Eighty Citizens, part Senators, part such as had enjoyed Offices, after the Expiration of which in the next Cen/us, they were to have been inscribed in the Number of Senators. The State wanted Soldiers; they had been obliged to Lift their very Slaves; and Hannibal was at the Gates of Rome. The few Senators that remained, oppressed with the Weight of Affairs, call'd for a Supply of Collegues in the room of those Senators that fell in this fierce War. It is probable the two last Cenfors, L. Æmilius and C. Flaminius, had either been flain in those bloody Engagements, or were out of their Office. No Expedient was left to supply the want of Cenfors, but in the Person of M. Junius Pera, then Dictator, a Post which seems to have eminently included all the other Dignities in the Commonwealth. But as that great Magistrate was then diftant from Rome, commanding the Army against Hannibal, L. Terentius Varro, first Consul, was ordered to repair to Rome, and name a Second Dictator, that might perform the Function of the Cenfors upon this Occasion; and it was agreed, in order to preserve the ancient Form of Government as much as possible, that the Conful should name none but the oldest of those who had been Censors; fo that when Varro nominated M. Fabius Buteo to be Dictator, he might more properly be faid to give the Republic the first and oldest of the Censors. than a Dictator to perform that Office. And to make this new Magistrate sensible that he had nothing of the Dictatorship but the Name, he was exprefly forbid the Nomination of a General of the Horse, a Prerogative in a manner inseparable from the Dictator, whose Lieutenant that Officer was look'd upon to be.

This is an Answer to the third Question. See above, p. 2.

Livy relates, that this Dictator, after his Nomination, afcending the Rostrum, declared plainly to the Assembly, that he cou'd neither approve of two Dictators at the same time, which was never seen in the Republic before, nor of his being made Dictator, without having Liberty to name his General of the Horse: that it was no less extraordinary, to have one single Citizen appointed to do the Business of two Censors; and that this dignity, contrary to Custom, shou'd be twice bestowed upon the same Person. That however, notwithstanding these Irregularities, he wou'd endeavour to behave himself in the Administration of his Office, with all the Caution that the Calamity of the Times, their present Fortune, and the Necessity of Assairs wou'd

Dec. 3. 1. 3. c. 7.

admit of.

This Dictator then nominated one hundred feventy feven Citizens to be Senators, beginning, as we faid before, with those that had enjoyed the Curule Dignities;

Dignities; and he made a Choice, fays Livy, which was equally approved of by all the Orders of the Common-wealth; Centum septuaginta septem cum ingenti approbatione omnium in senatum lectis, a Proof that this Choice was wholly his own Work. For if the Nomination of the Senators had depended upon the Voices of the Multitude, it would have been ridiculous to have given Praises to the Dictator, for a Choice which was none of his making. And to shew that the Blame, as well as the Praise of these Choices, fell upon the Cenfors; we read that Appius Claudius, and Plantius, his Collegue in the Cenforship, having filled the vacant Places in the Senate with the Sons of Freedmen; C. Junius Bulbulcus, and 2. Amilius Barbula, the Confuls for the following Year, moved with Indignation to fee so august an Affembly dishonoured by the Censors with such a Choice, annulled this Election of the Cenfors; and without any regard to the last Nomination, caused the Senators to be called anew, according to the ancient Roll, and in the same Order that they stood before the Cenforship of Appius and Plautius. ther Fabius Buteo wou'd have deserv'd the Praises that were bestowed upon him, nor Appius Claudius and Plautius the Shame they were loaded with, if the Appointment of the new Senators had depended upon the Votes of the Multitude.

We see therefore that the extraordinary Example of M. Fabius Buteo, raised to the Dictatorship only to fill the Vacancies in the Senate, amounts to no Consequence against the Prerogative of the Censors to make that Nomination. And if we except this one Instance, and such as happened in the tumultuous Times of the Gracebi, and during the Civil Wars; we shall not find, that from the very Foundation of Rome, any but the Kings, or the Consuls and Censors, who succeeded them in this part of the Government, ever appointed such Citizens of the Republick as should supply the Vacancies in the Senate.

I excepted the Tribuneship of the Gracchi out of my general Proposition; because we are told, that Caius the younger of them brought a great Number of Knights into the Senate, others afcribe this extraordinary Nomination to Livius Drusus another There are even fome who pretend that Tribune. this is only meant of particular Magistrates to dispense Justice to the People. I shall not enter into this Dispute, which wou'd require a Dissertation by it felf.

I shall only observe, that Sylla and Marius, the Leaders in the first Civil War, filled the Senate with their Creatures; that Julius Cafar carried his Usurpation yet further, and brought into it not only the Sons of Freedmen, but even Barbarians, nay, Quacks too and Soothfayers. That afterwards the Triumvirs having exhausted that venerable Body by their cruel Proscriptions, did in their turn crowd it with their Russians; so that after Augustus had rid himself of his two Collegues in the Triumvirate, the Senate was found to confift of above a thousand Senators, most of them unworthy of that great Title, and who had purchased it with Money, or the Price of Villany. That Prince, now absolute Master of the Empire, refolved to purge that illustrious Society of fo many base Members. Senatorum numerum, says Suetonius, deformi & incondita turba, erant enim suprà mille & quidam indignissimi, & post necem Casaris per gratiam & præmium allecti, quos Orcinos [others have it, Abortivos] vulgus vocabat, ad modum pristinum & splendorem redegit. Augustus having driven these Scoundrels out of the Senate, allowed those Senators that remained to name each of them another. But not being fatisfied with this Election, wherein Friendship, Confanguinity, and perhaps Interest too, had a greater Share than Merit; he made a fecond Choice, in which he confulted none Suet. c. but Agrippa; duabus lectionibus, prima ipsorum arbitratu, quo vir virum legit; secundâ suo & Agrippæ:

35.

A Proof that this Prince had taken to himself the Authority exercised before by the Censors, the Con-

fuls, and the Kings of Rome.

His Successors in the Empire looked upon the Authority of the Censors, as a Part of the Imperial Dignity: and Decius naming Valerianus to be Censor, and explaining to him all the Prerogatives and Rights of so eminent an Office; Valerianus, like an artful Courtier, made Answer, that those Prerogatives belonged to no body but the Emperor; bæc Trebellius sunt propter quæ Augustum nomen tenetis apud vos cen-Pollio.

sura desedit.

Let us now proceed to the second Question proposed, namely, why the Senate, consisting of none but Patricians then, that is, as the Author of the Memorial afferts, in the Four or Five first Ages of the Republic, there should be some Patricians that were Senators, and other Patricians mere private Men, and not partaking of that Dignity? We are asked, Whether this Distinction arose by Succession and Birthright, or whether the Choice of the Senators depended absolutely upon the Consuls, and afterwards upon the Cenfors?

In order to answer this Question, we must look back upon what we have related upon Livy's Authority, of the Institution of the first Senators. Romulus, according to that Historian, created but an hundred; either fays he, because he thought that Number sufficient, or because he cou'd chuse out but so many that had all the Qualifications requisite in a Senator; sive quia is numerus satis erat; sive quia soli centum erant qui creari Patres possint. Livy adds, that those hundred Senators were called Fathers, by way of Reverence; and their Children and Descendents Patricians; Patricique progenies eorum appellati; the Origin of the first and clearest Nobility among the Romans. Some Authors relate, that those first Patricians were Crescents upon their Shoes; others fay, the Letter C, to shew that they descended from the bundred (in Latin Centum) first Senators:

tors: The Children and Descendents of those first hundred Senators quickly multiplied, and produced several Branches of Patricians. At first the Senators, the Priefts, and all those who had the chief Inspection over the Affairs of Religion, were chofen out of this Body only. But those Employments, and especially the Dignity of Senator, did not devolve by Right of Succession: It is true, it was requisite to be a Patrician in order to be a Senator; but as the Number of Patricians quickly exceeded that at which the Senate was fix'd, all the Patricians cou'd not possibly be Senators. As we see that all the Venetian Nobles are not Senators, tho' a Man cannot be chosen a Senator unless he is a Venetian Noble: So at Rome it was not alone fufficient to be a Patrician, to be admitted into the Senate. Birth gave the first of those Qualifications, but it was Merit only that procured the fecond. In order to be admitted into that august Society, a Man must have given eminent Proofs of his Valour in War, and of his Capacity in Business in Times of Peace; the Choice which the Kings made of Senators, proves that this Dignity did not depend upon a lineal and confanguineous Succession; nay, e're long, and even under the Kings of Rome, the Blood of those first Patrician Families was not fo ferupulously regarded; and if any Stranger at Rome, or any Plebeians, were remarkable for their Merit, the Stranger was first made a Citizen; and then to give either the Stranger or the Plebeian a Right of Entrance into the Senate, they were declared Patricians. Thus Ancus Martius, the fourth King of Rome, being very much byass'd in favour of the Merit and Valour of a Tussan, named Lucumo, loaded him with Honours. made him first General of the Horse, then Patrician, and afterwards Senator. It was to avoid the open Violation of the Custom of admitting none into the Senate, but the Descendants of the first hundred Senators, that they gave the Strangers or Plebeians the Name of Patricians. The fame Lucumo having afterwards afterwards attain'd the Crown, with the Name of Tarquin the Ancient, by the Favour of the People did, that he might preserve their Affection, chuse out of that Order a hundred Senators, which he added to the Senate; and, after the Example of Ancus Martius, he endeavour'd to soften the Resentment which this Innovation might breed in the Patricians, by first ennobling, as it were, the Plebeians, by giving them that Name.

Patricios fecit, says Livy, & in senatum numerum This King might, indeed, grant those Plebeians the Privileges of the Patricians, and give them Admission into the Senate; but I don't see how he could declare a Man the Descendant of one of the hundred first Senators, that was not at all rea lated to them, but was of a mean, obscure Family; and whatever Authority may be afcrib'd to the Sovereign Power, it is hard to conceive how a King can at once put a Stop to the vulgar Blood that runs in a Plebeian's Veins, and fill them with a new Supply more noble and more pure. And accordingly, as those Plebeians were Patricians only nominally, and by a kind of a Law, they were call'd, The added Fathers, or Patricians of a lower Degree; Patres conscripti, minorum gentium: Whereas the Families of the first hundred Senators, and the true Patricians, assumed the Title majorum gentium, that is to fay, of Grandees, and of illustrious Families. Which answers to what we call in France the prime Nobility, Optimates; tho' it is not easy to determine now; whether that Title, which fo many People adorn themselves with, consists in a Nobility so ancient, that its Origin is unknown, or in actual Dignities which suppose, but do not always prove, a true Nobility.

These Distinctions ceas'd among the Romans soon after the Expulsion of the Kings. Dionysius Halicarnasseus tells us, that the Plebeians taking the Advantage of Coriolanus's Banishment about the 260th Year of Rome, introduced themselves into the Senate, and shared with the Patricians the Dignities which before were peculiar to the first Order of the Commonwealth. Other Authors defer the Entrance of the Plebeians into the Senate to the Time of the Creation of the Decemvirs, about the 301st Year of Rome, and only 56 after the Establishment of the Republic. After that time, all Rank and Nobility went by the Right of Images, that is to say, by the Curule Offices that had been in any Family; and a Citizen, tho' a Plebeian originally, was nevertheless reckon'd very noble, if his Ancestors had been invested with the chief Dignities of the State.

Rome, which at first knew but two sorts of Citizens, was then divided into three different Orders, which Ausonius comprehends in this Verse,

Martia Roma triplex, equitatu, plebe, senatu,

The Knights were originally part of the People, but the most considerable part of them; in like manner as the Senators were taken out of the Body of the Patricians, and by their Dignity were the chief of their Order. But when all the Honours of the Republic were become common among all the Citizens, Wealth alone came by degrees to make the whole Distinction; it was determined how much a Citizen should be worth to be inscribed in the Roll of Knights, or being a Knight, to be qualify'd for Senatorum gradum, fays Seneca, Census Senator. ascendere facit. The Patricians were included in these Regulations, as well as the other Citizens; and whatever their Merit might be in other Respects, it was the Goods of Fortune that decided their Rank. Such young Patricians as happen'd to be rich, were first placed in the Order of Knights, from whence the Cenfors afterwards chose out the most worthy to raise them to the Dignity of Senators; and those poor Patricians who had not Wealth enough to be taken into the Order of Knights, or to be admitted into into the Senate, remained mingled with the Common People, while they faw Plebeians, because wealthy, adorn'd with the Gold-ring, in Quality of Knights; or cloath'd with the Purple Robe, and filling the vacant Places in the Senate; Senator non es, says Onupbrius Panvinius, ergo eques aut de populo: neque senator, neque eques quamvis Patricius, ergo de populo, ordo enim præterea nullus superest.

Lycer to Earl Smile policy Memorial.

into the Scatt, remained to a deliver the Common People, while they have Philiam, beening weaking and a with the Cell tipe, to Outlay of Militage 2. v. and I have in the Scatter and thing 2. v. and I have in the Scatter and the sea of the value of the Scatter and the Scatter and the sea of the value of the Scatter and the Scatter and the sea of the value of the Scatter and the Scatter and the sea of the scatter of the Scatter and the Scatter and the sea

D 3

** ** "T

THE

HISTORY

OF THE SAL Indian

REVOLUTIONS,

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OFTHE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK I.

Romulus the Founder and first King of Rome, is at the same time Head of its Religion, and establishes divers Laws with the Consent of his Subjects. He numbers the Citizens, whom he divides into three Tribes. Each Tribe is afterwards divided into Ten Curia's or Companies. The Establishment of the Senate, and of the Order of Knights. The Nature of the Plebeians. The Sabins, after a very sharp War, make a strict Alliance with the Romans, and live under the same Laws. The Death of Romulus. Numa succeeds him. He makes Use of Religion to fosten the rugged Manners of the Inhabitants of the City of Rome. The Battle of the Horatii and Curiatii under Tullus Hostilius. Alba destroy'd. Its Inhabitants removed to Rome. Ancus Martius ordains Ceremonies to precede Declarations of War. He defeats the Latins, and joins their Territory to that of Rome. Tarquin the Ancient is chosen King by the Voices of the Chief among the People, whom he had gained over to his Side. He increases the Number of the Senators with a Hundred of his Creatures, The Institution of the Census by Servius Tullius. That Prince is murthered by Tarquin the proud, who seizes the Royalty without the Consent either of the People or Senate. His Ambition and Cruelty create a general Discontent, which the Lust of Sextus Tarquin his Son, and the Death of Lucretia, turn into a general Revolt. The Tarquins are expell'd, and the Royalty proscribed. The Republican State succeeds the Monarchical. They chuse Two Annual Magistrates, whom they call Consuls. The Division, which soon after happens between the People and the Senate, makes it necessary to create a new Office Superior to the Consulfhip, which is the Dictature. The Dissentions cease for some time; but afterwards they break out afresh, and go so far that the greatest Part of the People leave the City and retire to the Mons Sacer, nor do they come back again to Rome till they obtain a general Abolition of all Debts, and the Creation of the Tribunes of the People,

PRINCE of uncertain Birth, nursed First Year by a Proftitute, brought up by Shep- of Rome, herds, and afterwards the Leader of about the a Gang of Robbers, laid the first Year of the Foundations of the Capital of the World, World. He confecrated it to the and the God of War, from whom he would have it thought 4th of the he fprung; and admitted for its Inhabitants all forts piad. 753 of Men, and from all Parts, Greeks, Latins, Albans before the and Tuscans, most of them Shepherds and Robbers; Birth of but all Fellows of resolute Valour. An Asylum which our Savihe opened for the Protection of Slaves and Outlaws, our. drew thither great Numbers, to which he afterwards Tit. Liv. 1 added his Prisoners of War; and thus made Fellow-1. D. 1 c. Citizens of his Enemies.

Rome at the Beginning was not fo much a City, Origin of as a Camp of Soldiers, composed of little Huts, Rome. and furrounded with flight Walls, without Civil Laws, without Magistrates, and served only for a Place of Security to Men of desperate Fortunes, most of them without Wives or Children, whom Impunity or Hopes of Booty had drawn together. The Conquerors of the Universe owed their Origin to a Neft of Thieves.

Scarce was this growing City raised above its Foundation, when its first Inhabitants thought it expedient immediately to put the Government into fome Form. Their chief View was to reconcile Liberty with Empire; and to effect it they establish'd a kind of mix'd Monarchy, and divided the Sovereign Power between the Head or Prince of the Nation, a Senate that was to be his Council, and the Affembly of the People. ROMULUS, the Foun-Romulus der of Rome, was chosen for its first King; he was King. at the same time acknowledg'd the Head of their Dion. Hal Religion, the chief Magistrate of the City, and na- 1.2. p. 81. tural General of the State. Besides a great Number of Guards, he had twelve Littors, a kind of Ushers, Liv. c. 8. that . D 4

What the that always attended him when he appear'd in Pub-Lictors lic. Each Lictor was armed with a Battle-Axe, furrounded with a Bundle of Rods, to shew his Right of the Sword, the Symbol of Sovereignty.

Plut. in confined to very narrow Limits; and he had little Rom. more Authority than to call together the Senate and the Assemblies of the People; to propose Assert fairs to them; to march at the Head of the Army when War was resolved upon by a public Decree; and to give Directions about the Disposal of the Public Money, which was under the Care of two Treasurers, afterwards called Questors.

Romulus makes Laws. The first Business of the new Prince was to make several Laws concerning Religion and Civil-Government, all equally necessary for maintaining Society among Men, which nevertheless were not publish'd without the Consent of the whole Roman People. It is not well known what was the Form of Worship in those remote Ages. We only learn Religion of the first Romans.

Plut. in Rom.

Worship in those remote Ages. We only learn from Hiftory, that the Religion of the first Romans had a great deal of Conformity with their Origin. They celebrated the Feaft of the Goddess Pales. one of the tutelar Deities of Shepherds. Pan the God of Forests had also his Altars among them; he was honoured in the Festival called Lupercalia, or of the Wolves, in which they offered him a Dog. Plutarch mentions a God called Confus, who prefided over Councils: he had no other Temple than a Grotto cut out under Ground; a mystic turn has fince been given to that which perhaps was then a meer Effect of Chance or Necessity, and we are made to believe that this Temple was contrived under Ground, only to teach Men that the Deliberations of Councils should be fecret.

But the chief Religion of those rude Times lay in the Augurs and Aruspices, that is to say, in the Prognostics which they drew from the Flight of Birds, or the Entrails of Beasts. The Priests and Sacrificers persuaded the People, that in these they plainly read the Destinies of Men. This pious Fraud, which owed its Establishment to nothing but the Ignorance of those first Ages, afterwards became one of the Mysteries of State, as we shall have occasion to obferve in the Course of this History: And 'tis said that ROMULUS himself wou'd needs be the first Augur of Rome, for fear some other, by the help of those Superstitions, shou'd get Possession of the Confidence of the Multitude. He decreed, by a Law Cic. 1. 3. made purposely for that End, that no Election shou'd de Leg. be enter'd upon, nor any Person, for the future, raised Id. 1. 31. to the Royal Dignity, to the Priesthood, or to any of de Nat. the public Magistracies, nor any War undertaken, Deor. 'till the Auspices had first been consulted. It was in the fame Spirit of Religion, and with very wife Policy, that he forbad all Worship of foreign Dei- Dion. 1. 2. ties, which might have bred Divisions among his new Subjects. The Priefthood, by the fame Law, was to be for Life. A Priest could not be elected 'till the Age of fifty Years. ROMULUS prohibited their mixing Fables among the Mysteries of Religion, or giving them a false Lustre, under Pretence of making them more venerable to the People. They were bound to be acquainted with the Laws and Cuftoms of their Country, and to write the principal Events that happened in the State: Thus they were its first Historians and first Lawyers.

the

We have remaining in History, some few Frag-Laws of ments of the Civil Laws made by ROMULUS. The Romulus. first relates to married Women; it decrees that they Gellius. shall not leave their Husbands upon any Pretence c. 23. whatfoever, at the fame time that it allows the Men to put them away, and even to punish them with Death, with the Concurrence of their Relations, if they were convicted of Adultery, poisoning, making false Keys, or only drinking Wine. ROMULUS thought it necessary to make this severe Law to prevent Adultery, which he look'd upon to be a fecond Drunkenness, and, as it were, a natural Effect of that dangerous Liquor: But nothing ever equall'd the Cruelty of the Laws which he fettled relating to Dion: H. Children. He gave their Fathers an absolute Pow-Plut. Inftit. Justin. l. 1.

Romulus

numbers the Citi-

Bens.

er over their Lives and Fortunes; they might by their private Authority lock them up, put them to Death, and even fell them for Slaves three times over, whatever Age they were of, or whatever Dignities they had attained: A Father was the chief Magistrate over his own Children; he had Liberty to make away with those that were born with any monstrous Deformity; but before he did it, he was obliged to take Counsel with five of his nearest Neighbours; the Law left him more at Liberty as to a Daughter, provided she were not the eldest; and if he neglected either of these Ordinances, half his Effects were confiscate into the public Treasury. ROMULUS, who was not to learn that the Power of a State confifts not so much in its Extent, as in the Number of its Inhabitants, by the same Law made it criminal to kill, or so much as fell, an Enemy in Dion. H. War if he yielded. The Defign of his Wars was only to conquer Men, being fure he should never 1. 2. want Lands, while he had Troops sufficient to possess themselves of them.

It was to know his own Strength, that he number'd Dion.1. 2. all the Citizens of Rome. There was found to be but Three Thousand Foot, and about Three Hundred Horse. Romulus divided them all into three equal Tribes, and affigned to each a part of the City to inhabit: Each Tribe was afterwards fubdivided into ten Curia, or Companies of an Hundred Men, that had each a Centurion to command them. A Prieft, who was called Curio, had the Care of the Sacrifices, and two of the principal Inhabitants, called Duumviri, distributed Justice between Man and Man.

ROMULUS having undertaken fo great a Defign, Rome di-as that of founding a State, cast about how he might fecure the Sublistance of his new People. Rome, wided. built upon a foreign Ground, and which originally depended upon the City of Alba, had but a very narrow Territory: It is affirm'd, that it was at most V. Strabo. but five or six Miles. Nevertheless the Prince shared 1. V. it into three Parts, which it is true were unequal. The first was consecrated to the Worship of the Gods; another was reserved for the Revenue of the King and the Uses of the State; the most considerable part was divided into thirty Portions, to answer to the thirty Curia; and each private Man had no more Dion. H. than two Acres for his Subsistance.

parrow

The Establishment of the Senate succeeded this The Senate Partition; ROMULUS made it up of a Hundred of established, the chief Citizens; the Number was afterwards in- and what creased, as we shall observe in its proper Place. The it was. King named the first Senator, and ordained that in Id. Ibid. his Absence he shou'd have the Government of the City; each Tribe elected three, and each of the thirty Curiæ three more; which compleated the number of an hundred Senators, who were to be at the same time the King's Ministers, and the Protectors of the People: Functions no less noble than hard to execute well.

All Affairs of Importance were brought before the Senate. The Prince, as Head, did indeed prefide Liv. 1. 1. in it; but still all Questions were decided by Plura-c. 8. lity of Voices, and he had no more than his fingle Vote, like a private Senator. Rome, next to her King, faw nothing fo great and honourable as her Senators; they were called Fathers, (Patres) and their Descendants Patricians, the Origin of the first Nobility among the Romans. They gave the Senators this Name of Fathers, either upon account of their Age, or the Cares they underwent for their Fellow-Citizens. "Those who anciently composed the Coun- Cat. " cil of the Republic, fays Saluft, had indeed Bo- Confp. dies enfeebled by Years, but their Minds were " strengthned by Wisdom and Experience. All Civil and Military Dignities, those of the Priesthood itself, belong'd to the Patricians, exclusive of the Plebeians. The People indeed had private Magistrates, that dispens'd Justice among them; but those Magistrates Magistrates received their Orders from the Senate. which was look'd upon to be the fupream and living Law of the State, the Guardian and Defender of their Liberty.

The Order Dion. H. 1. 2.

The Romans, after having established their Senate, of Knights. made another Draught out of each Curia, of ten Horsemen; these were called Celeres, either from their first Captain whose Name was Celer, or else upon account of their Celerity or Swiftness, and because they seemed to fly to execute the Orders they received: Romulus made these his Guard. fought indifferently on Foot or on Horse-back, says Dionysius Halicarnasseus, according to the Occasion and Disposition of the Ground, not unlike our Dragoons: The State found them a Horse, from whence they were called Equites, and they were diffinguish'd by a Gold Ring; but afterwards, when their Number was increased, this military Function became a meer Title of Honour, and the Knights were no more bound to be Soldiers than the other Citizens. On the contrary, we shall see them take upon them to collect the Tributes, under the Name of Publicans, and to farm the Revenues of the Common-wealth; and tho' they were Plebeians, they were a kind of middle Order between the Patricians and the People.

Order of the Plebeians.

1. 2.

The third Order of the State confifted of the Plebeians. Of all the People in the World, the proudeft, even in their Original, and the most jealous of their Liberty, were the Roman Populace,

This last Order, tho' chiefly made up of Shepherds and Slaves, wou'd have their Share in the Government as well as the two former. It was they that confirmed the Laws, which had been digested Dion, H. by the King and Senate; and themselves in their Assemblies gave the Orders which they themselves executed. Every thing relating to Peace and War, the Creation of Magistrates, the Election of the King himself depended upon their Suffrages. The Senate only referv'd to themselves the Power of approving or rejecting their Schemes, which, without that Re-ftraint.

straint and the Assistance of their Wisdom, wou'd often have been too precipitate and tumultuous.

Such was the fundamental Constitution of this State, neither purely Monarchical, nor entirely Republican: The King, the Senate, and the People, were in a fort of mutual Dependance, from whence resulted a Balance of Authority which moderated that of the Prince, and at the same time secured the Power of the Senate, and the Liberty of the People.

ROMULUS, to prevent the Divisions which Jea- The Meanloufy, fo natural to Mankind, might breed between ing of Pa-Citizens of one and the same Republic, of whom tron and fome were raifed to the Degree of Senators, and Client. others left in the Order of the People, endeavoured to engage them one to another by reciprocal Ties and Obligations. The Plebeians were allow'd to Dion. H. chuse Patrons out of the Body of the Senate, who l. 2. were oblig'd to affift them with their Advice and Power; and they, on their Parts, with the Name of Clients, adhered upon all Occasions to the Interest of their Patrons. If the Senator were not rich, his Clients contributed towards the Portions of his Daughters, to the Payment of his Debts, or his Ranfom. if he happened to be taken Prisoner in War: And they durst not refuse him their Votes, if he stood for any Public Office. The Patron and Client were equall restrained from appearing in Courts of Justice as Evidence against each other. These mutual Obligations came in time to be effeemed fo facred, that those who violated them were reckoned infamous; nay, and it was lawful to kill them, as Men guilty of Sacrilege.

The prudent Regulations in the Government at- Wives tracted new Citizens to Rome, from all Parts. Ro-aft'd and MULUS made them all Soldiers, and already his State refus'd. began to grow formidable to its Neighbours; The Romans wanted nothing but Wives to fecure its Duration: Romulus fent Deputies to demand Intermarriage with the Sabines and the neighbouring Nations, and to propose a strict Alliance between them and Rome. The Sabines possess'd that Part of Italy which lies betwen the Tyber, the Teoron, and the Apennine: They inhabited divers little Towns, fome of which were governed by petty Princes; and others only by Magistrates, by way of Republic. But tho' their particular Governments were different, they were all united in a kind of League and Community, which formed the feveral Societies of that Nation into one State. These People were the most Warlike of any in Italy, and bordered nearest upon Rome. As they began to think Romulus's new Setlement might grow dangerous, they rejected this Proposal of the Romans; some of them added Raillery to their Denial, and afk'd their Envoys, Why Liv. l. 1. their Prince did not open an Afylum, for wandring Women, and Slaves of that Sex, as he had done for Men? That this wou'd be their only way to make Marriages, wherein neither Party cou'd upbraid the other.

and

the quickest Resentment; he resolved to be revenged, and to take away the Daughters of the Sabines by Force. He communicated his Delign to the chief among the Senate; and as most of them were brought up in Rapine, and were used to the Maxim, that Whatever they cou'd get by Strength was their own, they bestow'd the highest Praises upon a Project so well fitted to their Character; all that was left to do. Dion. H. was to find a Way to succeed in their Enterprize: ROMULUS was of Opinion, none wou'd do better, than to celebrate folemn Games at Rome in honour of Neptune the Creator of the Horse: There was always fomewhat of Religion in those Festivals, which were prepar'd by Sacrifices, and never ended with-

Romutus heard not this sharp Answer without

Those Sabines that lay nearest to Rome ran thither in great Crowds, upon the Day appointed for that Solemnity, as ROMULUS foresaw they wou'd. There came great Number of Geninenses, Crustuminians, and Antemnates, with their Wives and Children.

out feveral kinds of Races, Wreftling, and the like.

They

1. 2.

c. 9.

They were all received by the Romans with great Demonstrations of Joy; every Citizen had his Guest, and after having treated them the best they cou'd, conducted and placed them conveniently, where they might fee the Sports: But while these Strangers were taken up with the Spectacle, the Romans, by Ro-MULUS'S Order, rush'd, Sword in Hand, into the Affembly, took away all their Daughters, and turned the Fathers and Mothers out of Rome; who complained in vain of this Violation of Hospitality. Their Daughters at first shed Floods of Tears, but at last they fuffered themselves to be comforted; Time foften'd the Aversion they had for their Ravishers, who became their lawful Husbands. Mean while this Rape of the Sabines occasioned a War that lasted fe- The first veral Years. The Ceninenses were the first that shew'd War. their Resentment; they entered the Lands of the Romans in Arms. Romulus immediately marched against them, defeated them, killed their King or Captain, called Acron, took their City, and obliged all the Inhabitants to follow him to Rome, where he gave them the fame Rights and Privileges as were enjoy'd by the other Citizens. He re-enter'd Rome, laden with the Arms and Spoils of the King, whom he had flain, whereof he made a kind of Tropby, and consecrated it to Jupiter Feretrius, as a Monument of his Victory: The Origin of the Ceremony of the Origin of Triumph among the Romans. The Antemnates and the Tri-Crustuminians had no better Fortune than the Ceni-umph. nenses. They were overcome; Antemnes and Crustuminium were taken. Romulus wou'd not destroy ath Year them; but the Country being fat and fruitful, he fet- of Rome. tled in it two Colonies, which ferved for a kind of advanced Guard on that fide, against the Incursions of his other Enemies. Tatius King of the Curetes in the Country of the Sabines was indeed the last that took Arms; but he was not therefore the least formidable: he furpris'd the City of Rome by Treachery. and penetrated to the very Forum. Here there was a very obstinate and bloody Fight, nor cou'd it be forefeen

7th Year

Christ.

fon.

foreseen which way the Victory inclin'd, when the Sabine Women, who were become the Wives of the Romans, and who, most of them, had Children by them already, threw themselves into the very midst of the Combatants, and by their Prayers and Tears fuspended their Animosity. An Accommodation was agreed upon; the two Nations made Peace. and that the Union might be the stricter, most of these Sabines, who before dwelt only about the Country, or in small Boroughs, came and settled at Thus they, who in the Morning had conspired the Destruction of that City, became, e're Night, its Citizens and Defenders. Indeed it at first cost Romulus part of his Sovereignty: Heof Rome. was obliged to admit Tatius into a Share of it; and 747 before a Hundred of the noblest of that People were at the fame time brought into the Senate. But Tatius being afterwards killed by private Enemies, no bo> dy was appointed to fucceed him: Romulus came again into the Possession of all his Rights, and the whole Royal Authority returned into his Per-

> The Sabine Senators, and all that had followed them, grew infensibly Romans, Rome began to be look'd upon as the most powerful City in Italy; before the end of ROMULUS'S Reign it contained Seven and Forty Thousand Inhabitants, all Soldiers, all inspired with the same Spirit, and whose only View was to preserve their own Liberty, and to make themselves Masters of that of their Neighbours. But this fierce enterprising Temper made them less obedient to the Commands of their Prince; and on the other hand, the fupream Authority, which often aims at nothing but its own Augmentation, grew fuspicious and odious in the Founder of the State himself.

ROMULUS having conquered this part of the Sa-The Caufe bines, reigned too imperiously over his Subjects, a new People, who tho' they were indeed willing to lus's death. obey him yet, thought it reasonable that he himself Thou'd shou'd fubmit to the Laws which had been agreed upon in the Establishment of the State. Prince, on the contrary, affumed to himself alone the whole Authority, which he ought to have shared with the Senate and the Affembly of the People. He made War upon those of Camerinum, Fidena and Veii, little Towns comprised among the fiftythree different People, which Pliny fays inhabited Plin. 1. 3? the ancient Latium, but so inconsiderable, that they c. 5. fcarce had fo much as a Name, at the very time when they were in Being, except Veii, which was a Virg. Æn. famous City in Tuscany. Romulus subdued these 1. 6. People one after the other, took their Towns, ruined some of them, took away part of the Territory of others, and disposed of it according to his own pleasure. The Senate was offended at it, and could not patiently bear that the Government shou'd be turned into a direct Monarchy. They rid themselves of a Prince that grew too absolute. ROMULUS at 37th Year fifty-five Years of Age, and after having reigned of Rome. thirty-feven, disappeared; nor was it ever discovered in what manner he was made away with. The Senate, unwilling to have it thought they were any ways concerned in it, raifed Altars to him after his Death, and made a God of him whom they could not endure for their Sovereign.

The Royal Authority by the Death of Romu-Interreg-Lus was lost in that of the Senate. The Senators num. agreed to divide it among themselves, and each with of Rome. the Title of Inter-rex, governed in his Turn five Flav. Vo-Days, and enjoyed all the Honours of Sovereignty. piscus, in This new Form of Government lasted a whole Year, Tacito and the Senate never thought of giving themselves a Imp. new Master. But the People, who found that this 1. 1. Dec, Interregnum only increased the Number of their 1. Plut. Lords, loudly demanded to have it at an End: The in Numa Senate were obliged at last to yield up an Authority Pomp. which they cou'd hold no longer. They put it to the People, Whether they would proceed to the Election of a new King, or only chuse annual Magiftrates.

gistrates, that shou'd have the Government of the State. The People, out of Respect and Deserence to the Senate, less them the Choice of those two sorts of Government. Several Senators, that had a Relish for the Pleasure of seeing no Dignity in Rome superior to their own, inclin'd to the Republican State; but the Chief of that Body, who secretly aspired to the Crown, got it determined by Plurality of Voices, That no Alteration should be made in the Form of Government. It was resolved to proceed to the Election of a King; and the Senator that during this Interregnum had last perform'd the Office of Inter-rex, addressing himself to the People

The Form in full Assembly, said to them: "Elect your selves of electing "a King, O Romans, the Senate give their Con-Kings." sent; and if you make Choice of a Prince worthy

"to succeed Romulus, the Senate will confirm Assembly "him in that supream Dignity." A general Assembly of the Peo-bly of the whole Roman People was held for this the; what important Election. We believe it will not be unit was.

necessary to observe here, that this Name, Assembly of the People, took in not only Plebeians, but also the Senators, Knights, and all the Roman Citizens in general that had right of Suffrage, of all Ranks and all Conditions. They were the general States of the Nation, and they were called Assemblies of the People, because the Voices being reckoned by tale, the Plebeians, alone more numerous than the two other Orders of the State, generally had the Decision of all Affairs; which, however, in those early Times, was of no Effect, but as their Decrees were afterwards approved by the Senate: Such was then the Form observed in Elections: There were great Contests about that of Romulus's Successor.

The Senate confifted of old Senators, and of the new ones that had been added to them in the Reign of Tatius; this made two Parties. The old ones demanded a Roman; the Sabines, who had been without any King of their own fince Tatius, were for having one of their own Nation. At length, after

after great Disputes, they agreed, that the old Senators shou'd name the King of Rome, but that they should be obliged to chuse him from among the Sabines. Their Choice fell upon a Sabine of the Town 30th Year of Cures, but who commonly dwelt in the Country. of Rome. His name was NUMA POMPILIUS, a Man of vir-Livy. tue, Wisdom, Moderation and Equity, but no great Dion. Soldier; fo that not being able to get any Reputati-Hal. on by his Courage, he fought to diftinguish himself Plutby the Virtues of Peace. He laboured during his Numa. whole Reign, with the opportunity of a long Cessa- He insti-tion from War, to turn the Minds of the Romans to tutes Reli-Religion, and to inspire them with a great Fear of gion. the Gods. He built new Temples, he instituted Festivals; and as the Answers of Oracles and the Predictions of the Augurs and Aruspices, made the whole Religion of that rough People, he found it no hard Matter to perfuade them that the fame Deities which foretold what would happen, whether happy or unhappy, might as well cause the Happiness or Unhappiness they foretold: A Veneration for those superior Beings, who were so much the more awful as they were less known, was the Confequence of these Prejudices. Rome insensibly grew full of Superstitions; the State made them part of their Policy, and employ'd them with Success, to keep within the Bounds of Submission a People yet fierce and unpolished. It now became unlawful to undertake any thing that concerned the State, without consulting those false Deities; and NUMA, to give Authority to those pious Institutions, and gain himself the Respect of the People, pretended to have receiv'd them from a Nymph called Egeria, who he faid had revealed to him the Manner in which the Gods delighted to be served. His Death, after a Reign of forty-three Years, left the Crown to rear of TULLIUS HOSTILIUS, whom the Romans choice for Rome 81. the third King of Rome. He was a Prince ambiti-Tullus ous, bold, enterprifing, a greater Lover of War Hostilius.

than of Peace, and who upon Romulus's Plan refolved to preserve his State only by new Conquests.

Albans,

82d Year If the peaceful Conduct of NUMA was serviceable to the Romans, in foftning the rugged Savageness of their Manners, the bold undertaking Character of Tullus, was no less necessary in a State founded by Violence and Force, and furrounded by Neighbours jealous of its Establishment. The People of the City of Alba shew'd the greatest Animosity, tho' gainst the most of the Romans were originally derived from them, and Alba was look'd upon as the Metropolis of all Latium. Divers Causes of mutual Complaint very common between neighbouring States, kindled the War; or, to speak more properly, Ambition only, and a Spirit of Conquest, pushed them on to Arms. The Romans and Albans took the Field. As they were near Neighbours, the two Armies were not long before they met. It was now no Se> cret that they were going to fight for Empire and for Liberty.

Combat between the Horatii and Curiatii.

As they were just ready to engage, the General of Alba, whether he feared the Success of the Battle, or whether he was defirous only to spare the Effusion of Blood, proposed to the King of Rome, to refer the Destiny of both Nations to three Combatants of each Side, and that Empire shou'd be the Prize of the conquering Party. The Proposal was accepted the Romans and Albans named three Champions each; every Body fees I speak of the Horatii and the Curi-I shall not enter into the Particulars of this Dion. H. Combat; the three Curiatii and two of the Horatii 1. 3. Liv. fell in this celebrated Duel, and Rome triumph'd

Dec. 1. 1. thro' the Courage and Policy of the furviving Hora-1. c. 25. tius. The Roman returning into the City laden with Rome 87: the Arms and Spoils of his Enemies, met his Sifter, who was to have been married to one of the Curiatii. Seeing her Brother dreffed in her Lover's Coat of Armour which the herfelf had wrought, the could not contain her Grief; she shed a Flood of Tears, the tore her Hair, and in the Transports of her Sorrow uttered the most violent Imprecations against her Brother.

LOM

Horatius, warm with his Victory, and enraged at the Grief which his Sifter express'd with fuch unfeafonable Paffion in the midft of the Publick Joy, in the Heat of his Anger, ran his Sword thro' her Body: " Begone to thy Lover, fays be, and carry He kills " him that degenerate Paffion which makes thee bis Sifter " prefer a dead Enemy to the Glory of thy Coun-" try." Every Body detefted an Action fo cruel and inhuman. The Murderer was immediately feiz'd and drag'd before the Duumviri, the proper Judges of fuch Crimes; Horatius was condemned to lofe his Horatius Life, and the very Day of his Triumph had been condemn'd that of his Punishment, if he had not, by the Advice of Tullus Hostilius, appeal'd from that Judgment to the Affembly of the People. He appear'd there with the fame Courage and Resolution that he had shewn in his Combat with the Curiatii. The People thought fo great a Service might justly excuse them, if for once they moderated the Rigour of the Law: Horatius was acquitted, rather, fays Horatius Livy, thro' Admiration of his Courage, than for acquitted. the Justice of his Cause. We related this event on- Cic. pro ly to prove, by the Advice which the King of Rome Milone. gave to Horatius, to appeal to the People, that the Authority of that Affembly was superior to the Prince, and that in the Concurrence of the King and the feveral Orders of the State lay the true Sovereignty of that Nation.

The Affair of Horatius being ended, the King of Rome turned his Thoughts upon making his Authority acknowledg'd in the City of Alba, according to the Conditions of the Combat, which adjudged the Empire and Dominion to the Conquerors. That Dion. Hal Prince, in the Spirit and Maxims of Romulus, 1. 3. destroy'd the City, and removed the Inhabitants to Rome: There they received the Privileges of Citi-87th Year zens, and the Principal of them were admitted into of Rome. the very Senate: Such were the Julii, the Servilii, Dion. Hal E 3

the Quintii, the Geganii, the Curiatii, and the Clelii, whose Descendants afterwards rose to the chief Offices of the State, and perform'd very great Services for the Commonwealth, as we shall see hereafter. TULLUS HOSTILIUS having strengthened Rome by this Addition of Inhabitants, turned his Arms against the Sabines.

Year of

The Particulars of that War are not to my Sub-Romer 13 ject; I shall only fay that this Prince, after having gained various Advantages over the Enemies of Rome, died in the thirty-second Year of his Reign; Ancus Martius, Grandson of Numa, was elected in the room of Hostilius, by the Affembly of the People, and the Senate afterwards confirm'd this new Election.

Martins Year of Rome 114.

Ancus

Dion. Hal. 1. 3.

As this Prince derived all his Glory from his Grandfather, he applied himself to imitate his pacific Virtues, and his Respect for Religion. He inflituted feveral facred Ceremonies that were always to precede Declarations of War; but these pious Regulations, which were better Proofs of his Justice than of his Valour, made him contemptible among the neighbouring Nations. Rome quickly faw her Frontiers laid waste by the Incursions of the Latins, and Ancus found by his own Experience, that a Throne requires other Virtues than Piety. Neverthelefs, to keep still up to his Character, before he the Functi- took Arms, he fent to the Enemy a Herald called by the Romans Fecialis; this Herald bore a Spear headed with Steel, as the Badge of his Commission. Being come to the Frontiers, he cried with a loud Fecialis: ons of bis Office.

Liv. Dec. Voice, " Hear Jupiter, and thou Juno, hear Qui-1. l. r. c. " rinus, hear ye Gods of Heaven, of Earth, and 24. Cic. . " of Hell, I call ye to witness that the Latin Nati-2. de Leg. " on is unjust; and as that Nation has injured the A. Gel. 1. Roman People the Roman People and I, with the " Confent of the Senate, declare War against them."

We fee by this Form of Words, preserved by Livy, that the Name of the King was not fo much as mention'd, and that all was done in the Name, and by the Authority of the People; that is to fay, of the whole Body of the Nation.

This War was no less successful, than it was just. Ancus defeated the Enemy, ruined their Towns, removed the Inhabitants to Rome, and added their Territory to the Dominions of that City.

TARQUIN the Frst, or the Ancient, tho' a Stran- Tarquin ger, after the Death of Ancus, came to the Crown, the Ancient which he purchased by the generous Assistance he had formerly given to the Chief among the People. Year of It was to keep their Affection, and to reward his Rome. Creatures, that he brought a Hundred of them into the Senate; but that he might not confound the Dion. different Orders of the State, he made them Patri-Hal. 1. 3. cians, according to Dionysius of Halicarnasseus, be- Dion. fore he raifed them to the Dignity of Senators, who Hal. 1. 3. were now increased to the Number of Three Hun-Aur. de dred; at which they stay'd for feveral Ages. It viris illuwill perhaps feem strange, that in a State governed stribus. by a King affifted by a Senate, all Laws, Decrees, and the Refult of all Deliberations shou'd constantly pass in the Name of the People, without the least The Peoples mention of the Prince that reign'd; but we are to Power. remember, that this generous People had referved the greatest Share of the Government to themselves. No Resolution was taken, either for Peace or War. but in their Assemblies; they were in those Times called Affemblies by Curiæ: because they were to confift only of the Inhabitants of Rome, divided into thirty Curiæ: In these they chose their Kings. their Magistrates, and their Priests; made Laws, and administred Justice. 'Twas the King, with the Confent of the Senate, that conven'd these Asfemblies, and by a Senatusconfultum fix'd the Day when they shou'd be held, and the Matters which shou'd be debated in them. A Second Senatusconfultum was required to confirm what they had decreed; the Prince or chief Magistrate presided at these Assemblies, which were always preceded by E 4 Auspices Auspices and Sacrifices, whereof the Patricians were the fole Ministers.

But nevertheless, as all was decided in these Asfemblies by Plurality of Voices, and the Votes were counted by tale, the Plebeians always carried it against the Senate and Patricians; so that they had a much greater Share in all Decrees than the Senate and Nobles.

Servius Tullus. Year of Rome 175. Dion. H. 1. 3. Liv.

SERVIUS TULLIUS, Sixth King of Rome, a Prince entirely Republican notwithstanding his Dignity, but who cou'd not bear to fee the Government depend thus upon the dregs of the People, refolved to transfer all the Authority into the Body of the Nobility and Patricians; where he hoped to meet with juster Dec. 1.1. Views, and less Passion. The Enterprize was attended with very great Difficulties; he had to do with a People, of the World the most haughty, and most jealous of their rights; and to bring them to remit part thereof, he must deceive them with the Bait of fome Advantage more confiderable. The Romans, in those Times, paid certain Imposts by Head into the public Treasury; and as at the Beginning every Man's Fortune was much upon an Equality, they had all been subjected to the same Tribute, which they continued to pay upon the fame Equality, the Succession of Time had made great Difference between the Estates of some and of others.

Servius establishes the Cenfus.

SERVIUS, to blind the People, and to know the Strength of his State, represented in an Assembly, that the Number of the Inhabitants of Rome and their Riches being confiderably increased by the Multitude of Strangers that had fettled in the City, he did not think it just that a poor Citizen shou'd contribute to the public Expence as much as the richeft; that those Impositions ought to be proportioned to every Man's Ability; but that in order to get an exact Knowledge of this Particular, all the Citizens, upon the greatest Penalties, should be obliged to give in a faithful Account of what they were worth, to ferve as a Rule to the Commissioners which the Asfembly fembly of the People shou'd appoint to settle this Proportion.

The People, who faw in this Proposal nothing but their own Ease, received it with great Applaufes; and the whole Affembly, with unanimous Confent, gave the King Power to establish in the Government whatever Order he shou'd think most agreeable to the Good of the Public. That Prince. to effect his Purpose, first divided all the Inhabitants of the City, without Distinction of Birth or Rank, into four Tribes, called the Tribes of the City. He disposed into fix and twenty other Tribes the Citizens that dwelt in the Country and Territory of Rome. He then instituted the Census, which was nothing more than a Lift or Roll of all the Roman What the CITIZENS, containing their Age, Substance, Pro-Census fession, the Name of their Tribe and Curia, and the Number of their Children and Slaves. There was Fabius found to be then in Rome and its Territory, above Pictor. fourfcore thousand Citizens able to bear Arms.

SERVIUS divided this great Number into fix Claf- The Claffes fes, composing each Class of divers Centuries of of Citizens Foot. He put into the first Class fourscore Centu-regulated ries, into which he admitted none but Senators, Pa-by Servius. Dion. H. tricians, or Men remarkable for their Wealth; and 1. 3. Liv. each was to be worth at least a Hundred Mine, or Dec. 1. l. Ten Thousand Drachmæ; which in those Days t. Plin. I. might amount to fomewhat more than a Thousand 3. c. 33; Crowns of our Money; in which however I dare not be too positive, because of the Difference of Opinions among the Learned, about the Value and Variation of their Coins. We are not more certain whether each Century of this first Class consisted of a Hundred effective Men: On the contrary, there is ground to believe that SERVIUS, in the View of multiplying the Suffrages of the Patricians, increased the Number of their Centuries; and he concealed this fecret Defign, under the specious Pretence that the Patricians being richer than the Plebeians, one Century made up of a small Number of that chief Order ought to contribute as much to the Charges of the State, as a compleat Century of Plebeians.

The first Class of

These fourscore Companies of the first Class were divided into two Orders. The first confisting of the People the most ancient, all above forty five Years old, were allotted for the Guard and Defence of the City; and the other forty Companies, made up of those from seventeen to five and forty, were to march into the Field, and go to War. They had all the fame Arms Offensive and Defensive: The Offensive were the Javelin, the Pike or Halberd, and the Sword; and their Defensive Arms were the Headpeice, the Cuirafs, and the Cuiffes of Brafs.

> They dispos'd likewise under this first Class all the Cavalry, whereof they make eighteen Centuries, confifting of the richest and chief Men of the City. To these were added two other Centuries of Artisicers, who followed the Camp unarmed; and whose Bufiness was to prepare and manage the Machines of War.

Second Class.

The Second Class consisted but of twenty Centuries, and of those that were worth at least threescore and fifteen Mina, that is to fay, somewhat more than two thousand Livres. They used much the fame Arms as the Citizens of the first Class, and were diffinguish'd only by the Difference of their Shield.

Third Class.

There was, in like manner, but twenty Centuries in the Third Class, and a Man was required to have at least fifty Minæ, that is to say, somewhat more than Five Hundred French Crowns, to be admitted into it.

Fourth Class.

The Fourth Class was composed of the same Number of Centuries as the two former; and those that were placed in this Class were to be worth at least twenty five Mina, or about Seven Hundred and Fifty Livres.

Fifth Class.

There were thirty Centuries in the Fifth Class, in which were placed all those that had at least twelve Mina and an half, or fomewhat more than Three Hundred

Hundred Livres. Their only Arms were Slings, and generally they fought out of Rank, and upon the Wings of the Army.

The Sixth Class had but one Century, which in-Sixth deed could not so properly be called a Century, as Class. a confused Multitude of poor Citizens. They were A. Gell. 1. called Proletarii, as being no otherways useful to the Republic, than by Stocking it with Children (Proles in Latin) or Exempts, because they were excused from going to War and paying Taxes.

Under the Second Class, were comprised two Cen-Dion. H. turies of Carpenters and Artificers of warlike Ma-1.4. chines, and there were two others of Trumpeters joined to the Fourth Class. All these Classes were divided, like the First, into the old Men, who stayed at home for the Desence of the City; and the young Men, who formed the Legions that were to march into the Field. These made in all, One Hundred Fourscore and Thirteen Centuries, each commanded by a Centurion of distinguish'd Experience and Valour. SERVIUS having establish'd this Distinction among Policy of the Citizens of the fame Republic, ordained that the Servius to People shou'd be affembled by Centuries, whenever exclude the there was Occasion to elect Magistrates, make Laws, from the declare War, or examine into Crimes committed Governagainst the Common-wealth, or against the Privi-ment. leges of any Order. The Affembly was to be held out of the City, in the Field of Mars. It belonged to the Sovereign or Prime Magistrate to call these Assemblies, as well as the Curiæ; and all Deliberations were here too preceded by Aufpices, which gave great Authority to the Prince and Patricians, who were vested with the chief Offices of the Priesthood. It was farther agreed, that the Votes should be gathered by Centuries, whereas before they were reckoned by Tale; and that the fourfcore and eighteen Centuries of the First Class shou'd give their Votes first. Servius, by this Regulation, artfully conveyed the whole Authority of the Government into

this

this Body, made up of the Great Men of Rome; and without openly depriving the Plebeians of their Right of Suffrage, he, by this Division, made it of no Use to them. For, the whole Nation confifting but of One Hundred Fourfcore and Thirteen Centuries, and Fourfcore and Eighteen of these being in the First Class; if there were but Fourscore and Seventeen of Dion. Hal, the fame Opinion; that is to fay, one above half of the Hundred Fourscore and Thirteen, the Affair was concluded: And then the First Class, composed, as we faid before, of the chief Men in Rome, had alone the making of all public Decrees: But if any Voices The diffe- were wanting, and some Centuries of the first Class

Affembly by Curiæ

rence of the were not of the same Opinion with the rest, then they called in the fecond Class, and when these two Classes and Centu-were of the same Mind, it was utterly unnecessary to proceed to the third. Thus the common People had not the least Power when the Votes were gathered by Centuries, whereas when they were taken by Curia, the Voices being reckoned by their Number, the meanest Plebeian had as much Weight as the greatest Senator: After this the Assemblies by Curiæ were only held for the Election of the Flamens, that is to fay, the Priests of Jupiter, Mars, and Romulus, and to chuse the chief Curio, and some Under-Magistrates; which we shall speak of in their proper Place. We were fo particular in our Account of this new Plan of Government, only because, without the Knowledge of this, it would be difficult to understand what we shall hereafter relate, of the Contests which arose between the Senate and the People, concerning the Government.

Servius refolives to abdicate the Royalty.

The Royalty, after this Establishment, appear'd to Servius to be a Dignity entirely impertinent and unnecessary in a State almost Republican. It is said, that to compleat his Work, and to restore the Romans to full Poffession of their Liberty, he had generously resolved to abdicate the Throne, and to make the Government a perfect Commonwealth, under the Direction of two Annual Magistrates, who shou'd be elected in a general Assembly of the Roman Peo-Id. ibid. ple. But this heroic Design was frustrated by the Servius is Ambition of Tarquin the Proud, Servius's Son-kill'd. in-Law, who being impatient to reign, caused his King and his Father-in-Law to be assassinated. He Tarquin at the same time took Possession of the Throne, with-King. Year out so much as the Form of an Election, without of Rome consulting either Senate or People; and as if the su-pream Power had been his hereditary Right, or a Conquest which he had won by his Courage and Valour.

An Action fo inhuman, made him be look'd up- rear of on with Horror by all good Men. His Ambition Rome and Cruelty were equally detefted; at once a Parri-219. cide and a Tyrant, he had robbed both his Fatherin-Law of Life, and his Country of Liberty: And as he had ascended the Throne by this double Crime, he maintained himself in it by fresh Violences. He nevertheless behaved himself at first in his Tyranny with a great deal of Cunning; he fecured the Army, which he look'd upon to be the firmest Support of his Power: Haughty and cruel in Rome, and to those who were powerful enough to oppose his Designs; but mild, humane, and even familiar in his Army and with the Soldiers. He rewarded them magni-Dion, Hal. ficently, and more than once gave them the Townsl. 4. of the Enemy for Plunder. He feem'd to make War only to enrich them, whether he feared their Strength, if fuffered to keep together at home, or whether he did it to gain from them the more Affection to his Person and Interests. He beautified the City with several public Edifices; and as his Workmen were digging the Foundation of a Temple, they found, deep in the Earth, a Man's Head still covered with Flesh, which had remained without Corruption; this gave the Name of Capitol to that Temple, and the Divi-The Capiners and Augurs, who drew advantageous Confe-tol built. quences from the least Events, hence took Occasion to declare, that Rome shou'd one Day be Mistress of the World, and the Capital of the Universe. TARQUIN

Tarquin's Tyranny.

TARQUIN himself oversaw all these Works, constantly attended by a Band of Soldiers, that served for Guards and Spies at the fame time. These Slaves of the Tyrant, being dispersed into different Parts of the City, carefully watch'd if any fecret Conspiracy were forming against him. The slightest Suspicion was punished with Death, or at least with Exile. Several of the chief Senators of Rome were made away with by private Orders, for no other Crime, than having dared to bewail the Misery of their Country. He spared not MARCUS JUNIUS himself, who had married a Tarquinia, Daughter of Tarquin the Ancient, but whom he suspected upon account of his Riches. He had him put to Death, and used the same Cruelty towards the eldeft Son of that illustrious Roman, for fear of his Courage and Resentment. Lu-CIUS JUNIUS, another of Marcus's Sons, had shared the fame Fate, if, to avoid the Barbarity of the Tyrant, he had not pretended to be a Natural, and to have loft his Senses; which made People in Contempt, give him the Name of Brutus, which he afterwards made fo famous; as we shall quickly shew, Liv. Dec. The other Senators, uncertain of their Destiny, re-1. l. r. c. mained concealed in their Houses: The Tyrant con-

56. Ovid. fulted none of them, the Senate was never conven'd, there was never any Assembly of the People: A cruel and despotic Power was raised upon the Ruins of the Laws and of Liberty. The feveral Orders of the State, all equally oppressed, impatiently waited for fome Revolution, without knowing how to hope it, when the Lust of Sextus the Son of TARQUIN, and the violent Death of the chafte Lucretia, threw into Action the general Hatred which all the Romans had against the King, and against Monarchy itself.

There is no body ignorant of this tragical Story; we shall only take Notice, for the clearing up of what follows, that this virtuous Lady, not being able to endure the Thoughts of Life after the Violence she had received, fent for her Husband, her Father, her Relations, and the chief Friends of her Family, of whom she demanded Revenge: At the same time she plunged a Dagger into her Breast, and sell dead at the Feet of her Father and Husband. All that were present at this melancholy Sight, uttered bitter Cries: But while they gave themselves up to their Sorrow, Lucius Junius, better known by the Name of Brutus, which had been given him upon account of the stupid Air he put on, as it were letting fall the Mask, and shewing himself in his true Shape: "Yes, says he, (taking up the Dagger with which Lucretia had killed her self) "I here swear to take a severe "Revenge for the Injury that has been done her: "And I call you to Witness, all-powerful Gods,

"that I will expose my Life, and lose the last Drop of my Blood, to exterminate the Tarquins, and to " hinder any of that Family, or any other Man

whatfoever, from ever reigning in Rome.

He then put the Dagger into the Hands of Collatinus, Lucretius, Valerius, and all there present; from whom he exacted the fame Oath. This Oath was a Signal for a general Revolt: The fudden Change that had feemingly been made in the Mind of Brutus, was probably looked upon by the People to be akind of Prodigy, and a plain Proof that Heaven interpofed in Lucretia's Revenge. Compassion of the Fate of that unfortunate Lady, and Aversion to Tyrants, Romefree. made the People take Arms; the Army, moved suls. with the same Sentiments, revolted too: And by a From the public Decree, the Tarquins were banished from Rome. Foundation The Senate, to engage the People farther in this Re- of Rome, volution, and make their Quarrel with the Tarquins 244 Years the more irreconcileable suffered them to plunder compleat. the more irreconcileable, fuffered them to plunder Cic. 1. 3. the Palace. The Abuse those Princes had made of de leg. the Sovereign Power, caused the Abolition of Mo-Dion. H. narchy it felf. They devoted to the Gods of Hell, 1.5. Liv. and condemned to the feverest Punishments, those 2. Cic. Or. that should ever attempt to restore the Royalty. The pro Sextio. Republican State fucceeded to the Monarchic, the Se- Idem. de nate and Nobility made their Advantage of the leg. 1. 3. Wrecks of the Royalty, and possessed themselves of Val. Max. all 1.4.c. r.

all its Rights; Rome became partly an Aristocracy, that is to say, the Nobility got into their own Hands the greatest Part of the Sovereign Authority. Instead of a perpetual Prince, they chose for the Government of the State two yearly Magistrates, taken from the Body of the Senate, to whom they gave the modest Title of Confuls, to put them in mind, that they were not so much the Sovereigns of the Republic, as her Counsellors, and that their only Object ought to be her Preservation and Glory.

BRUTUS, the Restorer of Liberty, was chosen for Confuls the first Consul; and Collatinus, the Husband Rome ever of Lucretia, was made his Colleague, because it was likely he wou'd be more zealous to revenge the Outrage which had been done her, than any other Man.

A Conspi-

But this growing Republic was upon the Brink of being deftroy'd at its very Beginning. A Party was formed in Rome in favour of Tarquin; some young Noblemen, of the best Quality in the City, brought up at Court, and accustom'd to Licentiousness and Pleasure, undertook to re-establish that Prince. The auftere Form of a Republican Government, in which the Laws alone, always inexorable, have a Right to reign, gave them greater Apprehensions than the Tyrant himself: Being always used to the flattering Distinctions of the Court, they cou'd not bear that mortifying Equality, which fet them upon a level with the Multitude. This Party spread farther and farther every Day, and which is most surprising, the Sons of BRUTUS himself, and the Aquilii, the Nephews of COLLATINUS, were found to be at the Head of the Mal-contents. But before the Conspiracy broke out, they were all discovered, and their ill Designs prevented. BRUTUS, both the Father and Judge of the Criminals, plainly faw he cou'd not fave his Children without giving Encouragement to new Conspiracies, and being guilty himself of opening the Gates

Brutus's Sons.

D.H.1.5. of Rome to Tarquin. Thus preferring his Country to his Family, and without hearkening to the Voice of Nature, he caused his two Sons to be beheaded in his own Presence, as Traitors. The People admired the mournful Constancy with which he had himself prefided at the Execution. His Authority grew the greater for this Action; and after fuch a fevere Punishment of the Conful's two Sons, not a fingle Roman durst so much as think of bringing back Tarquin. Collatinus COLLATINUS, BRUTUS'S Colleague, by a contrary deposed. Behaviour, and for endeavouring to fave his Nephews, made himself suspicious, and was deposed from the Consulship. The People, jealous, and almost furious in the Defence of their Liberty, banish'd him from Rome; they durst not confide in the Shew of Hatred which that Roman expressed against Tar- Cic. 1, 4; quin. They feared, with some Reason, that being Offic. a Relation of that Prince's, he might have his Lust of Dominion in him, and be more an Enemy to the King, than to the Kingship. PUBLIUS VALERIUS Liv. Dec. was chosen in his Place, and Tarquin having now no 1. l. 2. c. farther Hopes from his Party in Rome, undertook 2. D. H. to restore himself by open Force. The Romans still against oppos'd it with an invincible Constancy; it came to Tarquini a War, and in the first Battel that was fought near the City against the Tarquins, BRUTUS and Aronces the eldest Son of Tarquin killed each other with their Lances; thus the two first Consuls of the Republic did not finish their Year of Consulship. VALERIUS Valerius continued alone in that Supreme Dignity, which made Publicola; the People apprehensive that he intended to reign Id. ibid. fingly. A House which he built upon an Eminence added to this Suspicion; his Enemies and his Enviers gave out, That it was a Citadel which he built for the Seat of his Tyranny. But that Great Man frustrated the Malice of these Reports, and quite dissi. pated them by the Moderation and Wisdom of his Conduct. He himself pulled down the House which gave occasion of Jealousy to his Fellow Citizens, and the Conful of the Romans was forced to hire a House to live in. Before he gave himself a Colleague, and while the whole Authority was in his own Hands, he by one fingle Law, in Favour of the People, changed the whole Form of the Government; and whereas under the Kings, the Plebiscita, or Decrees of the People, had not the Force of Laws any farther than they were confirm'd by a Senatusconfultum, VALE-R I us publish'd a Law which ordained the direct contrary, giving Permission to appeal to the Assemblies of the People, from the Judgment of the Confuls: By this new Law he extended the Privileges of the People; and the Confular Power was weakened in

He at the fame time ordained that the Axes shou'd be separated from the Fasces which the Lictors carried before the Confuls; to flew that those Magistrates had not the Right of the Sword, the Symbol of the Sovereign Authority: And in an Affembly of the People, the Multitude observed with Pleasure that he had caused the Fasces of his Lictors to be bowed down, as a filent Homage which he paid to the Sovereignty of the Roman People: And to remove all its very Beginning.

Plut. in Polic.

Publius

Marcus.

Ulpian.

Digeft. 1.

Tacit. 1.

Questors.

manner of Suspicion of his having the least Thoughts of Tyranny, he publish'd another Decree, making it lawful to kill, without any preceding Formality, the Man that shou'd aim at being Master of the Liberty of his Fellow-Citizens. This Law contained that the Affaffin shou'd be declared innocent, provided he brought Proof of the ill Defigns of him he had flain. It was upon the fame Principle of Moderation, that he wou'd not take upon him the keeping of the public Money raifed to defray the Charges of the War; it was deposited in the Temple of Saturn, and the People, by his Advice, elected Two Sena-Veturius, tors, afterwards called Questors, who were to have Minutius the Care of the Public Treasure. He then declared LUCRETIUS, Father of Lucretia, for his Colleague in the Confulship; may, and yielded to him, upon 1. Tit. 13. account of his Seniority of Years, the Honour of the Fasces, and all the other Marks of the Sovereign 11. The Power.

A Conduct fo full of Moderation, and Laws fo favourable to the People, got that Patricianthe Name of Publicola or Popular; and it was not so much to obtain that Title, as to bind the People the more strictly to the Defence of the public Liberty, that he abated of his Authority by these various Regulations.

The Senate inspired with the same Spirit, and convinced of what Consequence it was to themselves to make it the People's Interest to maintain the Commonwealth, took great Care of their Subsistence during the War and the Siege of Rome. They sent to rear of several Parts of Campania, and even to Cumæ to setch Rome Corn, which they distributed to the People at low 245. Rates, for sear if they wanted Bread, they might be tempted to purchase it with the Loss of the common Liberty, and open the Gates of Rome to Tarquin.

The Senate wou'd not fo much as lay any Impost upon the People during the War. Those wise Senators tax'd themselves higher than the rest, and we owe to that illustrious Company this generous and equitable Maxim, "That the People paid Tribute enough to the Commonwealth in raising Children " who wou'd in time be able to defend it."

But this just Condescension to the Necessities of the Ambition People lasted no longer than the Siege of Rome, and of the Pathe Fear of Tarquin's Arms. Scarce did the Fortune tricians of the Republic seem secured by the raising of this Siege, but the Ambition of the Patricians broke out; and the Senate quickly made it plain, that by substituting two Consuls drawn from their Body, in the room of the Prince, the People had only changed their Masters, the same Authority still continuing tho' the Name was altered.

The Royalty was indeed abolished, but the Spirit of Royalty was not extinguished; it was entered into the Patricians. The Senate, delivered from the Awe of the Royal Power, was for bringing into its own Body the whole Authority of the Government. In possessing the Civil and Military Dignities which were appropriated to that Order, they enjoy'd all the Power and even Riches which are the Effects of them:

F 2

And the chief Object of their Politics was still to keep the People in Subjection and Indigence.

Causes of the difturbances.

This People, whose Votes were so courted in the Elections and public Affemblies, fell into Contempt The Multitude in a Body was out of the Comitia. used with great Respect, but the particular Plebeian was hardly regarded; none were ever admitted into the Alliance of the Patricians. Poverty foon reduced the People to a Necessity of borrowing, which threw them into a Slavish Dependance upon the Rich; afterwards came Usury, a Remedy yet more intolerable than the Distemper; and at last Birth, Dignities and Wealth fet too great an Inequality between the Citizens of one and the fame Republic.

The Views of these two Orders quickly became opposite: The Patricians, abounding in Valour, and accustomed to Command, were always for making War, and fought nothing but to extend the Power of the Commonwealth Abroad; but the People defired to fee Rome free at Home, and complained that while they ventured their Lives to fubdue the neighbouring Nations, they themselves, at their Return from the Campaign, often fell into the Chains of their own Fellow-Citizens, thro' the Ambition and Avarice of the Great. We shall enter somewhat farther into this Point, as being the Ground of the Revolutions we are to speak of.

The Arts of the first Romans.

Of all the Means which the Calls of Nature have put Men upon inventing for Subfiftence, the Romans practifed only Tillage and War; they lived upon their own Crops, or upon the Harvest they reaped Sword in Hand in the Territories of their Enemies. All the Mechanic Arts that were not subservient to Dion. H. these two Professions, were unknown at Rome, or left to Slaves and Strangers. Generally speaking, all the Romans, from the Senator to the meanest Plebeian. were Labourers, and all the Labourers were Soldiers: And we shall see in the course of this History, that they called their greatest Captains from the Plough, to command their Armies. All the Romans, the

1. 2. Plut. in Rom.

very greatest in the Republic, inured their Children to these Employments, and bred them up in a hard and laborious way of Life, to make them the more robust, and the more capable of sustaining the Fatigues of War.

This domestic Discipline had its Rise from the Disposal of Poverty of the first Romans: They afterwards made the cona Virtue of what was the mere Effect of Necessity, quer'd and Men of Courage looked upon this equal Pover- Lands. ty of all the Citizens, as the Means to preserve their Liberty from all Usurpation. Each Citizen had at first for his Subsistence but two Acres of Land, as we faid before; Rome afterwards extended its Territory by little and little, by the Conquest of their Neighbours. They usually fold one Moiety of the Lands they conquered, to reimburse the State for the Charges of the War, and the other Moiety was added to the Publick Domain, which was afterwards either given or let at a fmall Rent to the poorer fort to help to maintain them: Such was the ancient Cuftom of Rome, under her Kings, that is to fay for above two hundred Years. But after the Extinction Usurpation of Monarchy, the Nobles and Patricians, who look of the No. ed upon themselves to be the only Sovereigns of the bles. Republic, did, under various Pretences, appropriate to themselves the best part of those conquered Lands, if they lay near their own Estates, or were any other ways convenient for them; thus infenfibly enlarging their own Revenues to the Diminution of those of the Republic: Or else under borrowed Names: they caused those Portions which were allotted for the Subfiftence of the poor Citizens, to be adjudged to themselves at inconsiderable Rates. They afterwards lay'd them into their other Lands, without Diffinction; and a few Years Poffession, and their own great Power, covered these Usurpations. The State lost her Revenue; and the Soldier, after having fpent his Blood to enlarge the Bounds of the Republic, faw himself deprived of the small Portion of Land that ought to have been at once his Pay and his Reward.

U/uriouf-

The Covetousness of some Patricians was not conness of the fined to these Usurpations only; but when the Harvest fell short by the Badneis of the Year, or by the Irruptions of Enemies, they knew how by an ill-meant Relief to make themselves a Title to their Neighbour's Field. The Soldier who then was without Pay being entirely destitute, was forced for his Subfiftence to have recourse to the rich. They lent him no Money but at exorbitant Usury, and that Usury too was in those Days Arbitrary, if you will Tae Ann. believe Tacitus. The Debtor must engage his little

1. 6. ad

Inheritance, and this cruel affiftance often cost him Ann. 786. his Liberty. The Laws of those times allowed the Creditor, upon default of Payment to feize his Debtor, and carry him to his own House, where he was treated like a Slave. Both Principal and Interest was often exacted with Stripes and Torments; his Land was taken from him by accumulated Ufury: and under pretence of the Observation of the Laws and strict Justice, the People daily suffered the utmost Wrong.

A Government so severe in a new Republic, quickly raifed a general Discontent. The Plebeians, who were oppress'd with Debts, and were afraid of being arrested by their Creditors, applied to their Patrons and the most difinterested among the Senators. They represented to them their extream Want, the difficulty they had to bring up their Children, and told them, that after having fought against the Tarquins for the Defence of the public Liberty, they were left expofed to become the Slaves of their own Fellow-Citizens.

These Complaints were followed by secret Menaces, and the Plebeians finding no Redress of their Grievances, at length broke out under the Confulate of T. Largius and Q. Clelius.

Year of Rome 2551

Rome, as we faid before, was furrounded by a great many petty States who were uneafy and jealous of the Increase of her Power. The Latins, the Æqui, the Sabines, the Volsci, the Hernici, and the Veientes, sometimes jointly, and fometimes feparately, were almost continually continually making War upon her. It was perhaps to the Enmity of these Neighbours that the Romans owed that Valour and that military Discipline which afterwards made them Mafters of the Universe.

Tarquin was still living: He had secretly formed League for a strong League against the Romans; thirty Latin Tarquin. Cities entered into the design of Restoring him. The Rome Hernici and the Volsci favoured the Undertaking: The 257. People of Etruria alone were for feeing the Business a little more ripe before they declared themselves; and remained neuter, with intent to take their Party according to the Success.

The Confuls and Senate beheld not without unea- Revolt of finess so general a Conspiracy against the Common-the People. wealth; they immediately thought of putting themfelves into a posture of Defence. As Rome had no Soldiers but her own Citizens, it was necessary to make the People take Arms; but the poorer fort, and especially those that were deep in Debt, declared, that it was Their Business who enjoy'd the Dignities and Riches of the Republic, to defend it; that for their Parts, they were grown weary of exposing their Lives every day for Masters so cruel and infatiable. They refused to give their Names, as was usual, in order to be lifted in the Legions; the hottest of them said boldly that they were no more tied to their Country, where not an Inch of Land was left them in property, than to any other Climate tho' never fo strange; that at least there they shou'd find no Creditors; that there was no way but leaving Rome to free themselves from their Tyranny, and they openly threaten'd to abandon the City, unless all Debts were abolish'd by a Senatusconsultum.

The Senate, very much difturbed at a Difobedi- D.H.1.5. ence so little different from a barefac'd Rebellion, immediately affembled: Several Opinions were given, The more moderate Senators were for relieving the People. M. Valerius, the Brother of Publicola, and who after his Example affected Popularity, reprefented that most of the poor Plebeians had been forced to contract Debts only by the Misfortune of War; that if in such a Conjuncture as this, when a great Part of Italy had declar'd in Favour of Tarquin, they did not redrefs the Grievances of the People, it was to be feared Despair might drive them into the Tyrant's Party, and that the Senate by stretching their Authority too far, might lofe it all in the Reftora-

Id. Ibid.

Several Senators, and especially those that had no tion of the Royalty.

Debtors, were of his Opinion; but it was rejected with Indignation by the richer fort. Appius Claudius opposed it also, but with different Views. That Senator, auftere in his Manners, and a fevere Observer of the Laws, maintained, that no Alteration cou'd be made in them, without endangering the Republic. Tho' he was compassionate of the People, some of whom he daily reliev'd out of his own Estate, he hevertheless declared in full Senate, that they could not with Justice refuse the Authority of the Laws to

But before we enter into a more particular Discusfion of this Affair, perhaps it may not be improper to give a thorough Knowledge of a Patrician, who by himself and Descendants had so great a Share in the feveral Commotions which afterwards agitated fuch Creditors as wou'd profecute their Debtors with the Commonwealth.

Rigor.

Appius Claudius's Character. Year of Rome 250.

Appius Clausus, or Claudius, was a Sabin by Birth, and one of the chief of the City Regillum. Some Civil Diffentions, in which his Party proved the weakest, oblig'd him to leave it. He retired to Rome, which offer'd an Asylum to all Strangers. follow'd by his Family and Partizans, whom Velleius Paterculus makes to have been Five Thousand.

The Right of Citizens was granted them, with Lands to inhabit, fituated upon the River Teveron: This was the Origin of the Claudian Tribe. pius, who was the Head of it, was receiv'd into the Senate, where he foon diffinguished himself by the Wildom of his Counsels, and especially by his immoveable moveable Firmness. He loudly opposed the Advice D. H.1.5. of Valerius, as we faid before, and represented in full Senate that Justice being the fureit Support of a State, there was no abolishing the Debts of particular Perfons without ruining the public Faith, the only Bond of Society among Men. That the People themselves, He dein whose Favour this unjust Decree was proposed, claims awou'd be the first Sufferers by it; that in any new gainst the Necessity the Rich wou'd shut their Purses; that the Discontent of the Great was no less to be feared than the Murmurs of the People, and that perhaps they wou'd not eafily bear the annulling of Contracts, which were the Fruit of their Temperance and Œconomy. He added, that no body cou'd be ignorant that Rome at the beginning affigned no greater Portions of Land to the Nobles and Patricians than to the Plebeians. That these latter had but lately shared the Estate of the Tarquins; that they had often got confiderable Booty in War, and that if they had fquandered it all away in Debauchery, there was no Reason why they shou'd be reimburst at the Expence of those who had lived with more Prudence and good Management; that after all they shou'd consider the Mutineers, and those who made the most Noise, were Plebeians of the very lowest Classes, and who in Battel were usually placed only in the Wings or in the Rear of the Legions; that most of them were armed with nothing but Slings; that there was neither great Service to be expected, nor great Danger to be feared from fuch Soldiers; that the Republic wou'd have no great Loss of People that were of no Use but to fill up a Number; and that to despise the Sedition was sufficient to break it, and to make the Authors fubmit themselves humbly to the Clemency of the Senate.

Some Senators, who were for finding a Medium Senators between two Opinions that were fo very opposite, divided in proposed that the Creditors at least might have no nions. Power over the Persons of their Debtors. Others were for acquitting the Debts of those only who were notorioufly unable to pay them; and there were fome, who to fave the public Faith, and at the fame time fatisfy the Creditors, propos'd to pay them out of the public Treasury. The Senate accepted of none of these Schemes: They resolved not to offer any Violation to fuch folemn Acts as Contracts; but in order to pacify the People, and engage them to take Arms in Defence of the State, they pass'd a Senatusconfultum, which granted a Suspension of all Debts 'till the End of the War.

This Condescension of the Senate was an Effect of the Approach of the Enemy, who advanced towards Rome. But a great many of the Plebeians grown bolder for the fame Reason declared, that they wou'd either have an absolute Abolition of all Debts, or leave it to the Rich and Great to take Care of the War, and defend a City in whose Safety they thought themfelves no longer concern'd, and which indeed they were ready to leave. The Resolution they shew'd gained them Companions. The Number of the Malcontents increased daily; nay, and many among the People, who had neither Debts nor Creditors, cou'd not help complaining of the Severity of the Senate, either thro' Compassion for those of their own Order, or out of that fecret Aversion which all Men naturally have to Dominion.

Tho' the wifest and richest of the Plebeians, and especially the Clients of the Nobles, had no Part in the Sedition; yet the Separation which the Mal-contents threatened, and their obstinate Refusal of taking Arms, were of dangerous Example, especially at a time when most the Latins, commanded by the Sons and Son-in-Law of Tarquin, were at the Gates The Senate might indeed have profecuted the most mutinous and the Leaders of the Sedition, but the Lex-Valeria, which allow'd Appeals to the Assembly of the People, was a Shelter for the Seditious; who were fure of being acquitted by the Accomplices of their Rebellion.

The Senate, to elude the Effect of a Privilege fo derogatory to their Power, refolved to create one fu-Distator. created.

pream

pream Magistate that should be equally above the Senate itself and the Assembly of the People, and be endowed with absolute Authority. To obtain the Confent of the People, they represented to them in a Public Affembly, that upon this Emergency, in which they had their Domestic Quarrels to decide, and the Enemy to repulse at the same time, it was necessary to put the Commonwealth under a single Governor, superior to the Consuls themselves, who shou'd be Arbiter of the Laws, and as it were the Father of his Country; and that for fear he shou'd make himself its Tyrant, and abuse this uncontroulable Authority, they ought not to trust him with it above fix Months.

The People not foreseeing the Consequences of this Change, agreed to it: and it shou'd seem as if they gave the first Conful the Power of naming the Dictator, as a kind of Amends for the Authority he loft by the creation of that eminent Post. Clelius presently named his Colleague T. Largius; the first T. Lar-Roman that, with the Title of Distator, enjoy'd gius Dicathis supreme Dignity, which may be called an ab-tor. folute Monarchy in a Republic, tho' not durable. Year of And indeed the Moment he was named he had Pow-Rome er of life and Death over all the Citizens of every before degree, and without any Appeal. The Authority Chrift. and the very Functions of all other Magistrates ceas-Liv. Dec. ed, or were subordinate to him: He had the nam-1. L. 2. ing of the General of the Horse, who was wholly at D. H. I. his Command, and ferved too as his Lieutenant Ge-He had Lictors armed with Axes like the He might raise Troops or disband them at his Pleasure. Whenever War was declared, he commanded the Armies, and went upon all military Enterprizes without the Advice either of the Senate or the People; and when his Authority was expired, he was not oblig'd to give an Account of any thing he had done during his Administration.

T. LARGIUS being invested with this great Dignity, named, without the Participation either of Senate or People, Spurius Cassius Viscellinus for General of the Horse; and tho' he was indeed one of the most moderate of the whole Senate, yet he outwardly feemed to do every thing with a stern Haughtiness, to make himself feared of the People, and awe them into their Duty. The Firmness of this Magiftrate struck a Terror into every Body; they found that under so resolute a Master, who would not fail to make an Example of the first that should rebel, Submiffion was the only Course they had to take.

nate

The Dictator feated upon a high Chair like a Throne, which he had caused to be set up in the public Place, and furrounded by his Lictors armed with their Axes, ordered every Citizen to be called one after another. The Plebeians, without daring to ftir a finger, offered themselves quietly to be lifted; and every one full of Awe ranged himfelf under his Banners. However this mighty Face of War turned into a Treaty: the Sabines terrified, fued for Peace without being able to obtain it. But there was a kind of Truce agreed to, that lasted almost a And thus this prudent Dictator, by a Conduct equally refolute and mild, found a way to make himself feared and respected both by the Enemy and his Fellow-Citizens.

But the end of the Dictatorship soon revived those domestic Feuds, which the Apprehensions of an approaching War had only suspended. The Creditors again fell to profecuting their Debtors, and thefe renewed their Murmurs and Complaints. This great Liv. 1. 4. affair raised fresh Troubles, and the Senate in hopes to prevent ill Consequences got the Consulship for APPIUS CLAUDIUS, whose Resolution they were well acquainted with. But left he should carry it too far they gave him for his Colleague SERVILIUS, a Man of a gentle, humane Character, and agreeable to the Poor and the Multitude. These two Magistrates were fure to be of contrary Opinions, SER-VILIUS out of Goodness and Compassion to the Unfortunate, inclined to the Suppression of the Debts, in Orat. Canulei. or at least to the taking off of the Principal those exorbitant and accumulated Interests which considerably exceeded it. He exhorted the Senate to make fome Regulation in this Matter, that might ease the People, and fettle the Tranquility of the State upon a lafting Foundation.

But Appius, a fevere Observer of the Laws, Appius's maintain'd with his usual Constancy that it was a Severity. manifest Injustice to relieve the Debtors at the Expence of the Fortunes of their Creditors; that this Project tended to the very Ruin of the Subordination necessary in a well-governed State; that the Condecension which SERVILIUS was for shewing to Neceffities of the People, would be look'd upon by the Seditious only as a concealed Weakness, and so breed new Pretensions; whereas nothing wou'd be a better Proof of the Power of the Commonwealth, than a just Severity shewed to those who by their Disobedience and Cabals had violated the Majesty of the Senate.

The People, informed of what had passed in the Senate, and of the different Inclinations of the two Confuls, showered as many Praises upon SERVILIus, as they threw Imprecations upon Appius.

The most mutinious flock together again; they hold fecret Affemblies in the Night-time, and in By Places; all is in Motion; when behold the Calamity of a private Man throws the public Discontent into Action, and raises a general Sedition.

A Plebeian laden with Chains, flings himself into Sad condithe public Place as into an Afylum. His Cloaths tion of a Debtor. were torn; his Visage pale and disfigured; a rough Liv. 1. 2. Beard, and Hair neglected and disordered made his Dec. 1. Countenance look ghaftly. He was nevertheless very well known; and fome remembr'd to have been with him in the Wars; and to have feen him fight with great Valour. He himself shewed the Scars of the Wounds that he had received upon feveral Occasions; he named the Confuls and the Tribunes under whom he had ferved, and addressing his Speech

Speech to a Multitude of People that furrounded him, and that earnestly enquired the Cause of the deplorable Condition he was in; he told them that while he bore Arms in the last War against the Sabines, he had not only been hinder'd from cultivating his little Inheritance, but the Enemy, in an Incursion, after having plundered his House, set it on Fire. That the Necessities of Life, and the Tributes which, notwithstanding his Misfortune, he was obliged to pay, had forced him to contract Debts; that the Interest being by degrees grown to an excessive Sum, he was reduced to the melancholy Expedient of yeilding up his Inheritance to discharge part of it. But that the merciless Creditor not being yet quite paid, had dragged him to Prison, with two of his Children; that to oblige him to haften the Payment Hal. 1. 6, of the Residue, he had delivered him over to his Slaves, who by his Order, had torn his Body with Whips At the fame he flung off his Garment, and discovered his Back still bloody with the Lashes he had received.

Insurecti. on on account of Dion.

The People already in Motion, provoked at fo barbarous an Action, uttered a thousand Cries of Indignation against the Patricians. The Noise ran in the Debts. a moment over the whole City, and the People flocked from all Parts into the Forum. Those whom the like Misfortunes had thrown into the Fetters of of their Creditors, make their Escape; the Sedition quickly finds Leaders and Abbettors. The Authority of the Magistrate is no longer regarded; and the Confuls, who came in hopes of putting a Stop to the Diforder by their Presence, being surrounded by the People hot with Fury, find neither Respect nor Obedience in the Citizens.

> Approx, abhorred by the Multitude, was just going to be infulted, if he had not escaped under Favour of the Tumult. Servilius, tho' more agreeable to the People, was forced to throw off his Confular Robe; and without any Mark of his Dignity, he runs into the Crowd, careffes, embraces the most mutinous, and with Tears in his Eyes con-

jures

jures them to appease this Sedition. He gives them his Word that he will immediately call the Senate, and take as much Care of the People's Interests in it, as any Plebeian could do; and as a Proof of his Sincerity, he proclaims by a Herald that none shall take up any Citizen for Debt, 'till the Senate had made fome new Regulation in this Affair.

The People upon his Word difperse: The Senate affembles. Servilius fets forth the Disposition of Men's Minds, and the Necessity in fuch a Conjuncture of abating fomewhat of the Severity of the Laws. Applus, on the contrary, always fixed to his Opinion, firmly opposes it. The Diversity of Sentiments breeds a Bitterness between these two: Applus, who could not help fowering the Ufefulness of his Counsels with the Austerity of his Character, and the Roughness of his Manners, publickly upbraids his Colleague with being a Flatterer and D.H.1.6 a Slave to the People. SERVILIUS on his fide reproach'd him with the Ruggedness of his Temper, his Pride, and the Animofity he shewed against the Plebeians. The Senate divide themselves between these two Great Men; each takes his Party according to his Inclination or Interest. The Difference of Opinions, and the Opposition of Sentiments, raise a great Noise in the Assembly. During this Tumult, fome Horsemen come full speed with an Account that an Army of Volsci were upon their march to Rome.

This News was received very differently by the Senate, from what it was by the People. The Senators, their Clients, and the richer fort of Plebeians take Arms. But those who were oppressed with Debts, shewing their Chains, asked with a fierce kind of a Smile, whether it was worth their while to expose their Lives to defend such Ornaments? And all those Plebeians obstinately resused to give their Names to be inrolled.

The City was in that Agitation which usually precedes the greatest Revolutions: the Confuls divided;

the

the People disobedient to their Magistrates; and the Volsci at the Gates of Rome. The Senate, who were almost equally afraid of the Citizen and the Enemy, engaged Appros to take upon him the Defence of the City, because they hoped the People would more willingly follow his Colleague into the Field. SER-VILIUS, who was appointed to march against the Enemy, conjures the People not to abandon him in this Expedition; and to prevail upon them to take Arms, he publishes a new Prohibition against detaining in Prison any Roman Citizen that was willing to go with him to War, or feizing his Children or his Goods: And by the fame Edict he engages himfelf in the Name of the Senate, to give the People at his return all manner of Satisfaction with relation to their Debts.

This Declaration was no fooner publish'd, but the People crowded in to list themselves, some out of Affection to the Consul, whom they knew to be their Friend, and others that they might not stay in in Rome under the severe and imperious Government of Applus. But of all the Plebeians, none inrolled themselves more heartily, nor shewed more Courage against the Enemy, than those very Persons who had been most active in the last Tumult. The Voldier for his Valour in this War, lest him the Plunder of the Enemy's Camp, without reserving any thing for the Public Treasury as was usual.

The People at his return met him with great Applauses, and confidently expected the Effect of his Promise. Servilius lest no Means untried to make good his Word, and to induce the Senate to grant a general Abolition of Debts. But Appius, who looked upon the least Change in the Laws to be dangerous, strongly opposed his Colleague's Design. He gave the Creditors fresh Power to drag the Debtors to Prison; and the Applauses he received for this from the Rich, and the Curses from the Poor, equally concurred to the confirming of this Magistrate in his Severity.

ly

Those that were arrested appealed to Servilius; they urged upon him the Promises he had made to the People before the Campaign, and the Services they had done in the War. They cried aloud before his Tribunal, that either in Quality of Consul and chief Magistrate, he shou'd undertake the Defence of his Fellow-Citizens, or that as General he shou'd not desert the Interest of his Soldiers. But Servilius, who was of a mild timorous Character, Liv. December 1. 1. 2. Patricians; and endeavouring to manage both Parties, he disobliged both, so that he got the Hatred of the one, and the Contempt of the other.

The People finding themselves abandoned by Servilus, and persecuted by his Colleague, assemble tumultuously, confer, and resolved to owe the Redress of their Grievances only to themselves, and to oppose Tyranny with Force. The Debtors being pursued into the very Forum by their Creditors, there find a sure Resuge among the Crowd; the Multitude in sury beat, disperse, and repulse those merciless Creditors, who implore in vain the Assistance of the Laws. A new Irruption of the Volsci, the Sabines, and the Æqui, raises the Courage of the People higher than before, and they openly resuse to march against the Enemy.

A. VIRGINIUS, and T. VETUSIUS, who fuc- Year of ceeded Appius and Servilius in the Confulate, Rome attempted to quell this Tumult by dint of Authority. 259. They caused a Plebeian to be seized that resused to list himself; but the People, still surious, tore him out of the Hands of the Lictors; and the Consuls experienced on this occasion, how little Respect is paid to Majesty without Strength. A Disobedience so declar'd, and so little different from a Revolt, alarmed the Senate, which assembled extraordinarily, T. Largius, whom we have seen Distator, gave his Opinion first. That ancient Magistrate, so venerable.

ee of

nerable for his Wisdom and Firmness, faid, "That " he faw, with abundance of Grief, Rome split as it were into two Nations, and forming two different Cities. That the first was full of nothing but Riches, and Pride, and the fecond of Mifery and Rebellion. That there was no appearance in either of Justice or of Honour, or even of common Decency; and that the Haughtiness of the "Great was no less odious than the Disobedience of That he was nevertheless " the common People. obliged to own, that he forefaw the extream Poverty of the People wou'd always keep up Diffention; and that he did not think it possible to restore Peace and Union between these two Orders, any otherwife than by a general Abolition of the Debts.

Other Senators were for restraining this Favour to those who in the last Wars had done good Service to the Commonwealth; and represented that it was no more than a Piece of Justice that was due to them, and for which Servilius's Promise stood engaged.

Appius's sharp Speech.

Appros, when it was his turn to speak, was equally against both those Proposals: " All these Seditions, fays he, do not proceed from the People's Want; they are much rather the Effect of an un-" bridled Licentiousness, which the Seditious are of pleased to call by the Name of Liberty. All this "Confusion has its Rife from the Abuse which the " People makes of the Lex Valeria; they violate the Majesty of the Confuls with Impunity, be-" cause the Mutinous know they can appeal from the " Condemnation of their Crime to the very Accomof plices of their Guilt; and what Order can we ever " hope to establish in a State, where the Decrees of " the Magistrates are subject to the Revisal and Judg-" ment of a Rabble that are guided by nothing but "their Fury and Caprice? We must create a Dista-" tor, added Appius, whose Judgments are without " Appeal; and then you need not fear that any Plebeian will be so insolent as to repulse the Lictors of a Magistrate, who has the sovereign Disposal " of their Lives and Fortunes.

The young Senators jealous of the Senate's Honour, and those especially whose Interest was concernaed in the Abolition of the Debts, declared for Appius's Opinion; they were even for bestowing that great Dignity upon him: They faid that none but a Man of his Firmness and Intrepidity, cou'd reduce the People to their Duty. But the old Senators, and the more moderate, thought that supreme Power formidable enough of itself, without placing it in a Man naturally severe, and odious to the Multitude. One of M. Valethe Confuls by their Advice named for Dictator Ma-rius Diaa-NIUS VALERIUS the Son of Volesius. He was a tor. confulary Man, above threefcore and ten Years old, Rome and of a Family from which the People had no rea- 259.

fon to fear either Pride or Injustice.

The Dictator, Plebeian in his Inclination, named 1. 1. 2. for General of the Horse Quintus Servilius, the Bro-D. H. I. 6. ther of him that had been Conful, and who was of Opinion like himself, that there was a great deal of Justice in the People's Complaints: He then convened a general Assembly in the Place of the Comitia. He appeared in it with a Countenance at once both grave and modest; and addressing himself to the People, he told them, that they need have no Apprehensions that either their Liberty, or the Lex Valeria, which was its chief Support, wou'd be in Danger under a Dictator of the Family of Valerius Publicola. That he did not afcend his Tribunal to cheat them with false Promises; that indeed there was a Necessity of marching against the Enemies who were advancing towards Rome, but that he wou'd engage in his own Name, and on the part of the Senate, to give them full Satisfaction with relation to their Complaints at their return from the Campaign: "And in " the mean while, fays he, by the Sovereign Power " with which I am invested, I declare your Persons, " your Lands, and your Goods, to be perfectly free! " I suspend the Effect of all Obligations that might be made use of to give you trouble: Come and " affift us to conquer new Lands from our Enemies

G 2

" for your use.

Id. ibid.

This Speech filled the People with Hopes and with Comfort. Every body took Arms with Pleasure, and ten Legions were raifed compleat; three were given to each Conful, and the Dictator referved four to himself. The Romans marched against the Enemy on different Sides; the Dictator routed the Sabines, and the Conful VETUSIUS gained a fignal Victory over the Volsci, took first their Camp, and then Velitræ, into which Place he entred Sword in hand in Pursuit of the Vanquished; and A. VIRGINIUS the other Consul, defeated the Æqui, and won a compleat Victory, which by means of the hafty Flight of the Enemy, was without much bloodshed.

The Senate apprehending that the Soldiers at their return wou'd challenge of the Dictator the Execution of his Promifes, defired him and the two Confuls to detain the Soldiers still under their Ensigns, upon pretence that the War was not quite finished. The two Confuls obeyed; but the Dictator, whose Authority was more independent of the Senate, difbanded his Army. He declared his Soldiers free of the Oath they took when they lifted themselves; and as a new Proof of his Affection to the People, he chose out of that Order four hundred of the most considerable, whom he brought into that of the Knights. He then went to the Senate, and demanded that they would diffatisfy'd. difengage his Word by a Senatus-consultum, and abolish all the Debts. The oldest Senators and the best Men, excepting only Approx, were for confenting to this Demand. But the Faction of the Rich got the better, and they were backed by the young Senators, who looked upon all Proposals in favour of the People, as fo many Diminutions of the Senate's Authority. There were even feveral that prefuming upon the Dictator's extream good Nature, reproached him, that he fought by the vilest Methods the Applauses of a base Populace. His Demand was rejected jected with great Tumult; and he was made to understand, that if his Dignity had not set him above the Laws, the Senate wou'd call him to an Account for difbanding his Army, as a thing contrary to the military Laws, and especially while the Enemies of the Republic were still in Arms.

Book I.

" I plainly perceive, fays that venerable old Man, The Diaa-" that I am not agreeable to you: I am accused of tor Valebeing too popular; may the Gods grant that all the rius's Speech in " Defenders of the Roman People, who shall rife the Senate-

" hereafter, may be as moderate as I am! But ex- house.

" pect not that I will deceive my Fellow-Citizens, D.H.I.6.

" who took up Arms upon my Promife, and who " with the Price of their Blood, have triumphed

" over your Enemies. A foreign War, and our

" domestic Feuds, were the occasion of the Repub-" lic's honouring me with the Dictatorship.

" now have Peace abroad, and I am hindred from " establishing it at home; thus my Power being " grown useless, I am resolved to abdicate this high

"Dignity. I had rather behold the Sedition as a " private Person, than with the Title of Dictator." Concluding with these Words, he left the Senate abruptly and convened an Affembly of the People.

When the Assembly was formed, he appeared in Valerius's it with all the Enfigns of his Dignity; he first return- Speech in ed the People Thanks for the Readiness with which the Assemupon his Orders they had taken Arms, and at the People, fame time highly praised the Valour and Courage, against the which they had shewn against the Enemies of the Senate. "You, fays he, like good Citi-Commonwealth. " zens, have performed your Duty. It were now " my turn to acquit myself of the Promise I made " you; but a Faction more powerful than the Au-" thority of the Dictator himself, hinders the Effect " of my fincere Intentions. I am publickly called " an Enemy to the Senate; my Conduct is censured; " it is laid to me as a Crime, that I left you the "Spoils of our Enemies, and above all, that I ab-" folved you from the military Oath, I know af-G 3 ter what manner, in the Strength of my Years. I D.H.1.6. " shou'd have answered such Injuries: but they defpife an old Man of above threefcore and ten; and

" as I am now past either revenging my self, or do" ing Justice to you, I freely throw up a Dignity in " which I can do you no Service. If however any one of my Fellow-Citizens still condemns me for 56 the Inexecution of my Word, I willingly put the 46 small Remains of Life, which I have left, into his " Hands; he may deprive me of it, and I shall nei-

66 ther murmur at it, nor oppose it.

The People heard this Discourse with no Sentiments but of Respect and Veneration: every body did him the Justice he deserved, and he was conducted quite home to his House by the Multitude, with as many Praises as if he had pronounced the Abolition of the Debts. The People turned their whole Indignation against the Senate, which had so often deceived them. They now keep no further Meafures; the Plebeians affemble publickly, and the most violent Proposals are most agreeable to the Multitude. The two Confuls, who still held the Soldiers engaged by their Oath, in concert with the Senate, marched into the Field, under pretence of News which they had caused to be brought, that the Enemies were making new Preparations. The People who perceived the Artifice, went not out of Rome without the utmost Fury; the hotter fort, rather than go any farther, were even for murdering the Confuls, in order to free themselves at once from the Oath that bound them to their Command. But the wifeft among them, and those who were swayed by the Fear of the Gods, having reprefented to them, that no Oath was worth making void by fuch a Crime, the Soldiers took another Method. They refolved to leave their Country, and fix themselves a new Settlement out of Rome. They immediately take up their Enfigns, change their Officers, and by the Advice, and under the Conduct of a Plebeian named

Year of. Rome

50

D.H.I.6. Sicinius Bellutus, they retire, and encamp upon a Mountain,

Mountain, fituate three Miles from Rome, near the Retreat on River Teveron, and fince called Mons Sacer. the Mons

A Defertion fo general, and which looked like Sacer. the beginning of a Civil War, gave great Uneafiness to the Senate. They immediately fet Guards at the Gates of the City, as well for its Security, as to hinder the rest of the Plebeians from joining the Malecontents. But those who were laden with Debts, and the most mutinous and seditious, escaped notwithstanding this Precaution; and Rome saw at her Gates a formidable Army made up of part of her own Citizens, and ready to turn their Arms upon those that remain'd in the City.

The Patricians divide themselves out into diffe-D.H.1.6. rent Tasks: some at the Head of their Clients, and of such Plebeians as would not take part in the Sedition, secure the most advanced Posts; others intrench themselves at the Entrance of the City; the old Men undertake the Defence of the Walls, and all appear equally vigorous and refolute.

The Senate after these Precautions, send a Depu-The Setation to the Malecontents, to offer them a general nate's De-Pardon, and exhort them to return into the City, or puties sent to their Ensigns. But this Step taken too soon, and in the first heat of the Sedition, only served to increase the Insolence of the Soldier. The Deputies were sent back contemptuously, with no other Answer but, That the Patricians should quickly find what Enemies they had to deal with.

The return of these Envoys augmented the Trouble in the City. The two Consuls, whose Magistrature was expiring, appointed the Assembly for the Election of their Successors; no body at so dangerous a time presented himself Candidate for that Dignity; several even resused it. At length they obliged Postbumius Cominius, and Spurius Cassius, Visce-year of linus, both Consular Persons, to accept it, and the Rome Senate pitched upon them, because they were equally 260, or agreeable to the Nobles and Plebeians, and because

4 Cashus

Cassius especially had always behaved himself very artfully between the two Parties.

The first care of the new Confuls, was to convene the Senate to deliberate upon the most speedy and easy Methods of restoring Peace and Union amongst the feveral Orders of the State.

Sentiment of Menenius.

to the Senate.

MENENIUS AGRIPPA, a Consular Person, and illustrious for the Integrity of his Manners, who was ordered to give his Opinion first, was for fending new Deputies to the Malecontents, with full Power to conclude this ugly Bufiness, upon whatever Conditions they shou'd think necessary for the good of the Republic. Some Senators thought it wou'd be a Derogation to the Majesty of the Senate, to send another Deputation to Rebels, who had given such an unworthy Reception to their first Messengers. But MENENIUS urged, that this was no time to infift up-His Speech on a vain Formality; that the Preservation of the Republic, and an indifpensable Necessity to which the Gods themselves were forced to submit, obliged the Senate to court the People. That Rome, the Terror of her Neighbours, was in a manner belieged by her own Citizens; that indeed they had as yet committed no Act of Hostility, but that for this very Reason they ought to prevent the beginning of a War, > which cou'd not but be fatal to the State, let the Success be what it would.

> He added, that the Sabines, the Volsci, the Æqui, and the Hernici, all irreconcileable Enemies of the Roman Name, would already have joined the Rebels, if they had not perhaps thought it more proper to let the Romans weaken and destroy themselves by their own Divisions. That no great Assistance was to be expected from their Allies; that the Nations of Campania and Tuscany were but of a doubtful Faith, and were always governed by Events; that they were not at all more fecure of the Latins, a People jealous of the Superiority of Rome, and ever fond of Novelty. That the Patricians deceived themselves, if they hoped merely with the help of their their Clients and Slaves, to withftand fo many domestic and foreign Enemies, who wou'd join to destroy a Power they abhorred.

M. Valerius, whom we spoke of just before, whose Valerius Mind was embittered against the Senate, added to inveight what Menenius had faid, That every thing was to be against the feared from the Fury of the Malecontents, most of D.H.1.6. whom had already abandoned the Care of their Inheritances, and the Culture of the Lands, as Men who had renounced their Country, and thought of nothing but fettling elsewhere. That Rome wou'd become a Defart, and that the Senate, by being too inflexible, wou'd be the occasion of the loss of its chief Strength, by the forc'd Retreat of most of the Inhabitants. That if they had followed his Advice during his Dictatorship, they might by the Abolition of the Debts have preserved Union and Peace among the feveral Orders of the State; but that they must not imagine the People, who had so often been cheated by the false Promises of the Senate, wou'd be fatisfied now with that Abolition. That he was afraid the ill Treatment they had received, wou'd make them demand strong Securities for the Continuance of their Rights and Liberties. That they must needs confess, that most of the Plebeians were dispoiled of their Inheritances; that the poor Wretches were thrown into Chains like fo many Criminals, and that they complained perhaps with some Justice, that the Nobles and Patricians, contrary to the original Conflitution of the State, studied nothing but how to make themselves Masters of the Government. Creation of a Dictator, a modern Invention of the Senate's, quite destroyed the Purpose of the Lex Valeria, the People's Refuge, and the Guardian of their Liberty. That this absolute Power intrusted in the Hands of a fingle Person, wou'd in time enable some Man to become the Tyrant of his Country; that these Innovations owed their rise to the imperious Maxims of Appius Claudius, and others of his Stamp, who feem'd to be wholly taken up with the Defign of establishing the Dominion of the Nobles upon the Ruins of the public Liberty; and to reduce free Citizens to the vile Condition of Subjects, and Slaves to the Senate.

Appius enfwers Valerius.

Appius arose when it was his turn to speak, and addressing himself to M. Valerius: " If you had oc confined your felf, fays he, merely to fpeak your of mind, without falling upon me fo unjustly, you had not exposed your felf to hear Truths, which may not be very agreeable to you. But before I offer them to this Body, it is just I should answer your Calumnies. Tell me, Valerius, where are the Romans that I have profecuted with the Rigor of Justice, to oblige them to pay me what they owe me? Name the Citizens that I have kept in Chains; go even to Mount Velia, and fearch among that Crowd of Malecontents, whether there is so er much as one that will fay, he left the City only for fear of being imprisoned by me. Every body knows on the contrary, that I have used my Debtors like my Clients and Friends; that without con-" fidering the old Debts, I have freely affifted them again in their Necessities, and that as much as in 66 me lay, the Citizens were always free. Not that 1 propose my Conduct as a Rule for others; I will always contend for the Authority of the Laws in favour of those that apply to them. I am even convinced, that with regard to certain Debtors that spend their Lives in Idleness and Debauchery, it is as reasonable to make them pay, as it is noble and generous to forgive poor Citizens who are peaceful and laborious, but whose Misfortunes have " reduced them to extream Want: Such has been " my Conduct, and fuch are the imperious Maxims " with which I am charged. But I have declared " myfelf a Favourer of the Great, fay they, and it " is upon my Counfels that they have poffeffed " themselves of the Government. This Crime, "Gentlemen, added Appius, turning towards the " chief of the Senate, I am guilty of in common with you. The Government belongs to you, and " you

" you are too wife to yeld it up to an unbridled Rab-" ble, to that furious Beast which hearkens to none " but its Flatterers, but yet whose Saves often be-" come their Tyrants; and this is what we ought to " apprehend from M. Valerius; who tho' he has no " Credit in the Republic, but thro' the Offices with " which we have honoured him, makes use of it now " to ruin our Laws, to change the Form of our Go-" vernment, and to pave himself by his mean Conde-" fcentions a Way to the Tyranny. You have heard " his own Words, and must have observed, that being " better informed than us of the pernicious Defigns of "the Rebels, he gives you notice to prepare for new " Pretenfions; and under colour of demanding Secu-" rity for the Liberty of the People, he feeks nothing " but to destroy that of the Senate.

But to come to the chief point, upon which we Sentiment meet this day. I fay then, that it is striking at concerning the very Foundation of a State to change its Laws, the Debts. " and that it is impossible to annul the Contracts be"tween private Persons, without violating the pub-" lic Faith, and ruining that original Contract,

" which first formed Societies among Men, Will " you now grant to a Seditious Mob, who are ready " to turn their Arms against their Country, what you have often prudently refused to quiet Citizens, " and Soldiers that fought beneath your Enfigns?

56 Confider that you cannot recede from this Article of the Debts, without opening a Door at the fame

"time to new Pretentions. E're long the Leaders 65 of the Sedition, in concert with M. Valerius, will want to be admitted into the chief Dignities of 56 the State. May the tutelar Gods of Rome grant, that the Government do not at last fall wholly in-" to the Hands of a base Populace, that will punish.

" you for your weakness, and banish you your selves from your Country! It is endeavoured to terrify " you with the Arms of the Rebels; but have not

" you their Wives and Children in Hostage? Will ff they attack with open Force, a City which incloses

co closes all that they hold most dear? But I will grant that they have no more regard to the Ties of Investives co Blood, than to the Laws of the Government: egainst the ... Have they the Generals, the Provisions, and Mo-Rebels. es ney necessary to maintain themselves in such an " Enterprize? What will become of them during Winter, which is now approaching, without Bread, " without Shelter, and without daring to ftraggle " for fear of falling into our Hands? If they take " refuge among our Neighbours, will they not find " the Government there, as well as at Rome, in the " Hands of the Great? Can Rebels and Run-aways expect to be placed in any other condition, but " that of wretched Slaves? But perhaps it is feared " that they will join their Arms and befige Rome, " destitute of a sufficient Number of Inhabitants for her Defence, as if the strength of the Republic 44 lay wholly in the Rebels. But have you not aee mongst the Patricians a flourishing Youth, and " full of Courage? Our Clients who are the foundeft part of the Republic, are they not like us, im-" moveably faithful to her Interests? Nay, if occasion be, let us arm our Slaves, let us make them " a new People; them we shall find Obedient. "They have in our Service, and by our Example, " learnt to make War. How stoutly will they " fight, if Liberty is to be the Reward of their Va-" lour? But if all these helps do not yet seem sufficient, recall your Colonies. You know by the last D. H. l. " numbering of the People, that the Republic has 5. P. 293. " no less than a Hundred and thirty Thousand ano 246. " Heads of Families; there are scarce the seventh " part of these among the Malecontents. To con-" clude, rather than have the Law dictated to us by " these Rebels, grant the Latins the right of Citi-" zens of Rome which they have fo long fued for.

"You will then fee them immediately run to your Affiftance, and you will want neither Soldiers nor Citizens. To reduce my Opinion to a few words,

"I think we ought not to fend Deputies to the Re" bels, nor do any thing that can show the least

" Fear or Uneafiness. If they return to their Duty,

" we ought to use them gently; but we should pur-

" fue them Sword in Hand if they perfift in their " Revolt.

An Advice fo full of Resolution was followed, The Senate tho' thro' different Views, by the Faction of the divided. Rich, and by all the young Senators. The two Confuls on the other hand, who were Plebeians by Inclination, and who courted the Affection of the Multitude, and the old Men, naturally timorous, maintained, that Civil War was the greatest Calamity that cou'd befal a State. They were backed by fuch of the Senate as regarded only the prefervation of the public Liberty, and who doubted whether some ambitious and enterprizing Man might not arise even out of the body of the Senate, and by the help of these Divisions make himself sole Master of the Government. But scarce were they so much as heard; the place was filled with nothing but Clamour and Threatning. The youngest Senators, infolent upon account of their Birth, and jealous of the Prerogatives of their Rank, went even fo far as to intimate to the Confuls; that they suspected them. They told them they represented the Person of Kings that they had their Authority and that of the Senate to maintain against the Invasions of the People; and the more Violent declared, that if the least Infult was offered to it, they wou'd take Arms to preserve to their Order a Power which they had received from their Ancestors.

The two Confuls, who were refolved to favour Policy of the People, after having conferred together in pri-the Convate, determined to give these hot Spirits time to fuls. grow cool, and for that Purpose to put off the Decision of this great Affair to the next Assembly. But before they broke up, in order to intimidate the young Senators, who had talked to them too audacioully, they threatned to deprive them of the right of Suffrage, by fixing the Age necessary to qualify a Man to be a Senator, unless they behaved themselves for the future with more Modesty in so venerable an Affembly. As that had not yet been fettled, the young Senators, more afraid of lofing their Rank than their Point, truckled to the Menaces and Power of the Confuls, who at the fame time made use of another Artifice against the older Senators that opposed the Abolition of the Debts. They gave them to understand, that they cou'd not bear this division in the Senate, and that if the Fathers did not enter into more unanimous Measures, they wou'd carry this Affair before the People; that they cou'd not without Injustice refuse them the Cognizance of it, according to what was practifed even under the Government of the Kings.

tors comply.

The Sena- The Senators who had embraced Appius's Opinion with most Warmth, plainly faw by the turn which the Confuls gave to this Affair, that it wou'd flip from them if they perfifted in their first Intentions. The fear of falling into the Peoples hand staggered them; the Tears and Cries of the Women and Children who embraced their Knees, and begged of them their Fathers and their Husbands, finished the perswasion of them: And the Senate being convened again, the greater Number declared for coming to an Agreement. Appius, always immoveable in his Opinion, and incapable of changing it but for the force of Reason, remained almost alone in his opposition, with some few of his Relations, who out of decency cou'd not leave him.

Appius's Undauntedness.

The Confuls triumphed upon having brought the Senate, almost in spight of themselves, to come into their measures. Appius, who was persuaded that all manner of Negotiation with the Rebels tended to the diminution of the Senate's Authority, addressing himself to the two Consuls: " Tho' you feem re-" folved, fays he to them, to treat with the Peo-" ple upon the Conditions they shall prescribe to " you; and that even those who were of the con" trary Opinion have changed their Minds, either thro' " Arms.

"thro' weakness or Interest; for my part I declare once more, that indeed we cannot have too much regard for the Misery of a People saithful and obedient; but I affirm that all manner of Negotiation is dangerous so long as they continue in

As the Senate had taken their Resolution before, this Discourse was hard with Pain, and considered as that of a Man zealous indeed for the Senate's Glory, but too much opinionated of his own Abilities, and either out of Vanity, or the Obstinacy of his humour, incapable of ever changing his Opinion.

The Senate, without giving any heed to it, nam- Deputies ed Ten Commissioners to treat with the Malecontents from the and chose out of their own Body such as had always Senate to declared in favour of the People. T. Largius, Me-the People. nenius Agrippa, and M. Valerius were at the Head of this Deputation, all three Confulars, and of whom two had governed the Republic, and commanded her Armies in quality of Dictators: They fet forward with their Colleagues towards the Camp. This great News was got thither before them: the Soldiers ran out in Crowds to receive their old Captains, under whom they had fought fo many Battels. Shame and Rage were mingled in the Face of these Rebels, and there yet appeared thro' the publick difcontent a remainder of the former respect created by the Dignity of Command, especially when supported by great Merit.

The meer Presence of these great Men had been sufficient to bring back the Rebels to their Duty, if dangerous Spirits had not taken care to keep up the Fire of Division.

SICINIUS BELLUTUS, as we faid before, had Sicinius gained the Confidence of these Soldiers; he was a and L. Ju-Plebeian, very ambitious, but artful, a great Master nius Chiefs at somenting Discord, and one that expected his People. own Advancement from the Troubles of the State. He was backed in his Designs by another Plebeian much of the same Character, but somewhat more crafty.

crafty. He was named Lucius Junius, like the ancient Deliverer of Rome, tho' of a very different Family: nay, he affected the Surname of Brutus, out of a ridiculous vanity of comparing himself with that illustrious Patrician. This Plebeian advised Sicinius to cross at first the Negotiation of the Deputies, and to create new Obstacles against Union and Peace, in order to find out what advantage they might get from it, and at what Price the other Party wou'd purchase it. "The Senate betray their fear, says he: We are Masters, if we know how to improve this opportunity: Let those grave

"Magistrates speak what they have to say; I will

" undertake to answer them in the Name of our Comrades, and I hope what I shall say will be

These two Heads of the Plebeians being agreed upon the different Parts they were to act, Sichni-

" equally useful and agreeable to them.

vs introduced the Deputies into the Camp. All the Soldiers flocked about them, and after they had taken their place where they cou'd be heard by the Multitude, they were told that they might give an ac-D.H.16 count of their Commission. M. Valerius, speaking for the rest, said, that he brought them joyful News; that the Senate were pleased to forget their sault; that they were empowered to grant them even all the Favours that were compatible with the common good of their Country; that nothing now hinder'd them from returning into the City, revisiting their Houshold Gods, and receiving the Embraces of their Wives and Children, who sighed for their return.

SICINIUS replied, that before the People confented to this, it was but Justice they themselves shou'd lay open their Grievances and Pretences, and know what they might hope from these fine promises of the Senate; and at the same time he exhorted those of the Soldiers that wou'd defend the public Liberty to appear. But a prosound Silence reigned in the Assembly: they stood looking at one another, and these these Soldiers not being Masters of the Talent of Elocution, durst not take upon them to stand up for the common Cause. Then that Plebeian who had taken the Name of Brutus, arose, as he had before agreed privately with Sicinius, and address'd himself to the Soldiers: "One wou'd imagine, Fellow-

"Soldiers, fays he, by this deep Silence, that you Fine are still awed by the servile fear in which the Pa-Speech of tricians and your Creditors have so long retained L. Junius.

" you. Every Man consults the Eyes of the rest to D.H.I. 6.

" see if he can perceive more Resolution in them

" than he sinds in himself, and not one of you is bold enough to dare to speak in public, that

" which is the constant Subject of your private Con" versations. Do you not know that you are free? This Camp, these Arms, will not they convince you that you are no longer under your Tyrants?

"And if you still can doubt it, is not this step which the Senate has taken sufficient to satisfy you of it entirely? These Men, haughty and imperious as "they are, now come and court our Friendship; they no longer make use either of proud Com" mands, or cruel Treats; they invite us as their Fellow-Citizens to return into our common Country, and our Sovereigns condescend to come to our very Camp, to offer us a general Pardon. Whence then can proceed this obstinate silence, after such if you doubt the Sincerity of their Promises; if you fear that under the "Veil of a few fine Speeches they conceal your former Chains, why do you not speak? And if you

" dare not open your Mouths, at least hear a Ro" man, who has Courage enough to fear nothing

" but not speaking the Truth

Then turning to Valerius, "You invite us, fays he, to return to Rome; but you do not tell us upon what Conditions: Can Plebeians poor, tho

" free, think of being united with Patricians fo rich,

" and fo ambitious? And even tho' we shou'd agree upon those Conditions, what Security wou'd they give give us of their Words, those haughty Patricians, who make a Merit in their Body of having deceived the People? You talk to us of nothing but Pardon and forgiveness, as if we were your Subjects, and Subjects in Rebellion; but that is the Point to be decided. The Question is which is in fault, the People or the Senate; which of those two Orders first violated that common Society which ought to fubfift between the Citizens of one and the same Republic.

"In order to judge of this without Prejudice, give me leave barely to relate a certain number of facts, for which I will defire no other Witnesses

but your felf and you Colleagues.

"Our State was founded by Kings, and never was the Roman People more free and more happy than under their Government. Tarquin himfelf, the last of those Princes, Tarquin, so odious to the Senate and the Nobility, was as favourable to Us as he was averse to you. He loved the Soldiers, he had an esteem for Valour, he was always for rewarding it; and every body knows that having found immense Riches in Suessa, a Town of the Volsci, which he had taken, he chose rather to leave the Booty to his Army, than to

Slaves, the Horses, the Corn, and the Household-stuff, there remained over and above to each appropriate it to himself; so that besides the Soldier five Minæ of Silver.

"Nevertheless, to revenge your Injuries we drove that Prince from Rome; we took Arms against a Sovereign that defended himself only with the Prayers he made us to leave your Interests, and to return to his Obedience. We afterwards cut to pieces the Armies of Veii, and Tarquinia, which " endeavoured to restore him to the Throne. The formidable Power of Porsenna, the Famine that we were forced to undergo during a long Siege, the fierce Affaults, the Continual Battels; in a word, was any thing capable of shaking the Faith which

" which we had given you? Thirty Latin Cities unite to restore the Tarquins; what wou'd you " have done then, if we had abandoned you, and " joined your Enemies? What Rewards might we " not have obtained of Tarquin, while the Senate " and Nobles wou'd have been the Victims of his " Resentment? Who was it that dispersed this dan-" gerous Combination? To whom are you obliged " for the Defeat of the Latins? Is it not to this " very People, the Author of a Power which you " have fince turned against themselves? For what " Recompence have we had for the Affiftance we " gave you? Is the Condition of the Roman People " one jot the better? Have you affociated them in " your Offices and Dignities? Have our poor Ci-" tizens fo much as found the least Relief in their " Neceffities? On the contrary, have not our brave-" est Soldiers, oppress'd with the Weight of Usury, " groaned beneath the Chains of their merciless " Creditors? What has come of all those vain Pro-" mifes of abolifhing in time of Peace the Debts " which the Extortions of the Great had forced " them to contract? Scarce was the War finished, " but you alike forgot our Services, and your Oaths. "With what Defign then do you come hither? "Why do you try to inveigle this People by the " Enchantment of your Words? Are there any " Oaths fo folemn as to bind your Faith? And after " all, what wou'd you get by a Union brought " about by Artifice, kept up with mutual Distrust, " and which can end at last in nothing but a Civil "War? Let us on both fides avoid fuch heavy " Misfortunes; let us not lose the Happiness of our "Separation; fuffer us to depart from a Country " where we are loaden with Chains like fo many "Slaves; and where falling to be Farmers of our own Inheritances, we are forced to cultivate them " for the Profit of our Tyrants. We shall find a "Country where-ever we are allowed to live in Liberty; and fo long as we have our Swords in our Hands, H 2

" Hands, we shall be able to open ourselves a Way into more fortunate Climates.

A Discourse so bold, renewed in the Assembly the melancholy Remembrance of all those Miseries whereof the People complained; every Man was eager to quote Examples of the Rigour of the Patricians; fome had loft their Inheritances; others complained of having long fuffered in the Prisons of their Creditors; several shewed yet the Marks of the Stripes they had received; and there was not one that besides the general Interest, had not a particular Injury to revenge.

us answers L. Junius. Idem. ibid. p. 403.

T. Largius, the Head of the Deputation, thought T. Largi-himself bound to answer all these Complaints, and he did it with that exact Equity and Uprightness, which was fo natural to him. He faid, that it was not in their power to hinder Men who had lent their Money with an honest Intention, from exacting the Repayment of it; and that it was without Example in any well-regulated Government, that the Magistrate shou'd refuse the Aid of the Laws to those that demanded it, fo long as those Laws and Customs ferved for the Rule in the Government. That nevertheless the Senate was willing to look into the Neceffities of the People, and to remedy them by new Regulations; but that it also became their Justice, to diffinguish those, whose prudent Conduct deserved the Relief of the Commonwealth, from fuch as were fallen in Poverty only thro' their own Sloth and Intemperance; that those seditious Men who feemed to make it their Business to keep up the Division between the Senate and the People, were not more deferving of Favour, and that it wou'd be a very great Advantage to the Republic to lofe fuch Citizens.

Sicinius interrupts Largius.

T. Largius was going to proceed in a Discourse more fincere, than convenient, at the prefent Conjuncture, when Sicinius, provoked at what he had faid in relation to the Leaders of the Sedition, cut him off abruptly, and addressing himself to the Asfembly:

fembly: "You now fee, my Companions, fays he, " by the haughty Speech of this Patrician, what you " are to expect from his Negotiation, and what "Treatment is preparing for you at Rome, if the Senate can once draw you into their Power: And then turning immediately to the Deputies: "Propose " directly, fays he, the Conditions you are impow-" ered to offer us for our Return, or this Instant " leave our Camp, where we are not diposed to bear

" with you any longer.

MENENIUS, who well knew that fuch Explicati- Menenius ons were only likely to exasperate the Dispute, took Agrippa's upon him to speak, and addressing himself in his Discourse. turn to the whole Assembly, he represented, that they were not come to the Camp only to justify the Conduct of the Senate; that those wise Magistrates. studious for the Public Good, had carefully enquired into the unhappy Causes of their Divisions, and had found, that the extream Indigence of the Plebeians, and the Severity of their Creditors, was the true Scource of them; that in order to redress this at once, they had determined by unanimous Confent, and by the fovereign Authority, with which they were invested, to annul all Obligations, and to declare the poor Citizens free of all manner of Debts: and that as to those which might be contracted hereafter, Provision should be made by a new Regulation to be agreed upon between the People and the Senate; that a Senatusconsultum should afterwards pass conformable to that Agreement, and be enacted into a Law; and that all the Commissioners in the Affembly should engage their Lives to the People, and devote themselves and Children to the Infernal Gods, if they failed in their Promise.

This prudent Magistrate finding the Minds of the People foften'd by these Concessions, and desiring to leffen the Jealoufy that was between the Poor and Rich, represented to them how necessary it was in a State, that one part of the Citizens shou'd be richer than another: and we are told, that to inculcate this Maxim into that People, yet fierce and unpolished, he made use of that famous Apologue of a Conspira-Dec. 1. l.cy of all the Members of the human Body against the 2. c. 32. Stomach, under pretence that without working, it only enjoyed the Fruit of the Labour of all the reft. After having applied it to the People and the Senate, he defired them to confider, that that august Body, like the Stomach, conveyed thro' the feveral Members joined to it, the same Nourishment that it received itself, but much better prepared, and that to it alone they owed their Life and Strength. "Was it on not the Patricians, added he, that first stood up. " for the public Liberty? To whom do you owe the " Establishment of the Republic? When Dangers threaten, on whom do you turn your Eyes, and " whence have always proceeded those generous " Counsels that have faved the State? Nothing is " more precious to that wife Body, than your Prefervation and Union. The Senate loves you all with the reasonable Affection of a Father, but " without debasing itself to the treacherous Fawnings of a Flatterer. You demand the Abolition of the Debts; they grant it you: But they grant " it only because they think it just, and necessary to " the good of our Country. Return then with Conse fidence into the Bosom of that common Mother, who has educated us all in Sentiments equally geor nerous and free. Receive our Embraces as the " first Fruits of Peace; let us enter all together into " Rome; let us jointly carry thither the first News of our Re-union; and may the Gods who protect st this Empire grant, that it may be hereafter celebrated by new Victories over our Enemies.

L. Junius The People cou'd not hear this moving Speech without shedding Tears; all the Plebeians, as with withstands one Voice, cried out to Menenius, that they were Menenius fatisfied, and that he might lead them back to Rome.

But the pretended Brutus, that had just before spoken so sharply against the Senate, stopped his sudden Heat. He told the People, that in truth they ought at present to be satisfied with the Abolition of the Debts; but that he cou'd not forbear letting them know that he was very apprehensive for the future; and that he feared the Senate wou'd one day take Revenge for the Justice they had been forced to dothem, unless, added he, Ways be found to secure the State and the Liberties of the People against the Enterprizes of so ambitious a Body.

"What other Security can you ask, replied ME-Officers " NENIUS, besides what our Laws and the Consti-demanded tution of the Republic afford already? Grant us, by Brutus answered Brutus, some Officers to be chosen out out of the " of the Order of the Plebeians. We do not defire Order of "to have them diftinguished by the honourable Plebeians, " Marks of the Magistracy, neither with the Robe and called " bordered with Purple, nor the Curule Chair, nor Tribunes of

" the Lictors. We are willing to leave all that Pa-" geantry to Patricians proud of their Birth or Dig-" nities; we shall be contented if we may every Year " elect fome Plebeians, that may only have Authori" ty to hinder the Injustices that may be done to the " People, and to defend their Interests both public " and private. If you came hither with a fincere

"Intention to give us Peace, you cannot reject fo

" equitable a Propofal.

The People, who are always of the Opinion of him that speaks last, immediately applauded what Brutus had faid. The Deputies were extreamly furprised at such a Demand; they retired a little apart from the Assembly to confer together; and being returned to it, MENENIUS told them, that they asked a very extraordinary thing, and which in time might even be the Source of new Diffentions; that it absolutely exceeded the Bounds of their Instructions and Powers; but that M. Valerius and some of the Deputies wou'd go and make their Report of it to the Senate, and that it wou'd not be long before they returned with an answer.

These Commissioners repaired with all speed to Rome; the Senate was immediately convened, and H 4

they laid open the Peoples new Pretentions. M. Valerius declared himself their Protector; he represented that they should not think to govern a warlike People, that was both Soldier and Citizen at the fame time, as they might rule peaceable Subjects that had never stirred from their Fire-sides. That War, and a continual Exercise of Arms inspired a kind of Courage, which could not bear the fervile Dependance which was expected from these brave Men: That indeed it was but Justice to have the most particular Regards for a generous People, that had rooted out Tyranny with the Expence of their Blood; that it was his Opinion, they ought to grant them the Officers they demanded; and that perhaps fuch Inspectors might not be altogether useless in a free State, to have an Eye over those among the Great, that might fome time or other be tempted to carry their Authority too far.

Approvs cou'd not hear fuch a Speech without burning with Indignation. He called both Gods and Men to be Witnesses of all the Mischiess that such an Innovation in the Government wou'd bring upon the Republic; and as if his Zeal and Rage had infpired him, he foretold the Senate, that by this Excess of Condescension, they were suffering a Tribunal to be fet up, which by Degrees wou'd rife against their Authority, and at length destroy it. But this generous Senator was little minded, and his Remonstrance was looked upon as only the Spleen of a Man obstinately wedded to his own Opinion, and out of humour that it was not followed. fide prevailed; most of the Senators, weary of these Divisions, were willing to have Peace at any rate; thus almost with an universal Consent, they agreed to the Creation of these new Magistrates, who were called Tribunes of the People.

A Senatusconfultum was made accordingly, which at the fame time included the Abolition of the Debts; the Deputies of the Senate carried it to the Camp as the Seal of Peace. The People now feemed to have nothing nothing to detain them longer out of Rome; but the Leaders of the Sedition wou'd not allow them to feparate before they elected the new Magistrates of the People. The Affembly was held in the very Camp; the Auspices were taken; the Voices and Suffrages were gathered by Curiæ, and they chose for the first Tribunes of the People, according to Dionyfius Halicarnasseus, L. Junius BRUTUS, and C. SICINIUS BEL-LUTUS the Leaders in the Revolt, who at the fame time affociated C. and P. Licinius, and Sp. Icilius Ruga into The first their Dignity. Livy fays that C. Licinius and Lucius Tribunes of Albinus, were the first Tribunes, and that they chose People that themselves three Colleagues, among whom SICINIUS Rome reer BELLUTUS is named as one; and that Historian adds. that fome Authors related that there were at first but two Tribunes elected in that Assembly.

Be this as it will, those first Tribunes and those Movers of the Sedition, in order to prevent the Senate's Resentment, had the Skill to interest the whole Nation in their Desence. The People before they left the Camp by their Advice declared the Person of their Tribunes sacred; a Law was pass'd to that Essect, which made it Death to offer the least Violence to a Tribune, and all the Romans were obliged to take the most solemn Oaths for the Observation of this Law; the People then sacrificed to the Gods upon that very Mountain, afterwards called the Mons Sacer, from whence they returned into Rome, led by their Tribunes and the Deputies of the Senate.

End of the First Book.

THE

HISTORY

OFTHE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OF THE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK II.

The Tribunes of the People, who had been created only to binder the Plebeians from being oppressed, endeavour to destroy the Authority of the Senate. The Origin of the Plebeian Ædiles. In what manner the Tribunes obtained a Right to convene the Assembly of the People. Coriolanus declares boldly against the Enterprizes of the Tribunes. The Character of that Patrician. The Tribunes require him to answer for his Conduct before the Assembly of the People. Coriolanus refuses to acknowledge the Authority of that Tribunal. The Senate at first interposes in bis Favour, but at length abandons bim, and grants a Decree to refer the Decision of this Difference to the Assembly of the People. Coriolanus is condemned to perpetual Exile. He retires among the Volsci, whom be prevails upon to take Arms against the Romans. He enters their Dominions at the Head of a numerous Army. Every thing gives way before him: Rome berself is upon the Brink of the most dreadful Calamities, when she is freed from the Danger by the Wisdom and Prudence of two Roman Ladies among others, one the Wise, and the other the Mother of Coriolanus.

OME, by the Establishment of the Tri-The tronbuneship, changed the Form of her Govern-bles that ment a second time. It had passed before, the creaas we have already seen, from the Monarchic ting of Tri-State, to a kind of Aristocracy, where the whole bunes of Authority was in the Hands of the Senate and the the People. Great. But by the Creation of the Tribunes there arose insensibly, and by slow Steps, a Democracy, wherein the People, under different Pretences, got Possession of the Government.

The Senate at first seemed to have no Occasion to The Powapprehend any Danger from the Tribunes, who had er and Auno Power but to interpose in the Defence of the Ple-thority of beians. Nay those new Magistrates had at first nei-bunes. ther the Quality of Senators, nor a particular Tribunal, nor any Jurisdiction over their Fellow-citizens, nor the Power of calling the Assemblies of the People. Habited like mere private Men, and attended by one fingle Servant called Viator, which was indeed little different from a Footman, they fat upon a Bench without the Senate, and were never admitted into it but when the Confuls called them in, to ask their Opinion upon fome Affair, that concerned the Interests of the People. Their whole Authority confifted in a Right to oppose the Decrees of the Senate by the Latin Word Veto, that is to fay, I forbid it; which they wrote at the bottom of their Decrees, when they thought them contrary to the Liberty of the People; and this Power was confined within the Walls of Rome, or at most to a Mile round; And that the People might always have in the City Protectors at hand to take their part, the Tribunes were not allowed to be absent from the City any one whole Day,

Day, except in the Feriæ Latinæ. For the same Reason they were obliged to keep their Doors open Day and Night to receive the Complaints of such Citizens as shou'd stand in need of their Protection. Such Magistrates seemed designed only to prevent the Oppression of the Distressed; but they did not long contain themselves within the Bounds of so much Moderation. There was nothing afterwards so great and exalted to which they did not raise their ambitious Views. We shall quickly see them stand in Competition with the chief Magistrates of the Republic; and under pretence of securing the Liberty of the People, they indeed concealed a Design of ruining the Authority of the Senate.

Ædiles created. One of the first Steps of these Tribunes was to ask Permission of the Senate to chuse two Plebeians that, with the Title of Ædiles, might assist them in the Multitude of Affairs with which they said-they were overloaded in so great a City as Rome, and especially in the beginning of a new Magistracy.

The Senate, always divided, and having loft fight of the fix'd Point of their Government, suffered themselves to be carried away just as these ambitious Men pleased; this new Demand also was granted them. Such was the Origin of the Plebeian Ædiles, the Creatures and Ministers of the first Tribunes; and at the beginning they were only their Agents, but afterwards they took to themselves the Inspection of the public Edifices, the Care of the Temples, Baths, Aqueducts; and the Cognizance of a great many Affairs which before belonged to the Consuls:

D. H. 16. a new Breach made by the Tribunes in the Senate's Authority.

However, the more popular Senators hoped that by yielding up fomething of their Right, they had at least restor'd Quiet to the Republic. And indeed Rome appeared to be in Repose, and the Union of the People and Patricians seemed to be sincere and durable. But the Fire of Division, which lay hid at the bottom of their Hearts, was not long before it flamed out afresh: A Famine that happened the Oros. 1. z. following Year, under the Confulship of T. GEGA-C. 5. NIUS and P. MINUTIUS, ferved the Tribunes for a Rome, Pretence to fall again upon the Grandees and the Se- 261. nate. Sp. Icilius was this Year the first of the Tribunes, and BRUTUS and SICINIUS, to keep D.H.1.7. themselves still at the Head of Affairs, were descended from the Tribuneship to the Office of Ædiles. Those seditious Men, whose Credit subsisted only by the Misunderstanding they fomented between the two Orders of the Commonwealth, maliciously gave out, Sedition that the Patricians having their Granaries full of rais'd by Corn, had occasioned the public Dearth in order to the Trimake up to themselves the Abolition of the Debts, by the excessive Price at which they shou'd fell it; that this was a new kind of Usury invented by these Tyrants, with intent to get at an inconfiderable rate the little Land that was still left to the poor Plebeians.

Nevertheless those Tribunes cou'd not but know, that the People themselves, and their Desertion upon the Mons Sacer at the time for sowing the Corn, was the Cause of this Scarcity, because in that general Disorder, where most of the Malecontents had Thoughts of settling elsewhere, the Lands remained uncultivated and unsown. But these Dealers in Sedition studied for nothing but Pretences; they were very well assured, that let them be ever so improbable, they would pass for the most solid Arguments with a Populace that wanted Bread; and they inveighed against the Government only to make themselves Masters of it, or at least to change it according to their own Interests.

The Senate used no Arms against these Invectives, D. H.1.7. but a constant and generous Care, and a continual p. 417. Application to provide for the Peoples Necessities. They bought up Corn on all sides; and because the Nations bordering upon Rome, who were jealous of her Greatness, resused to surnish them, they were forced to send for it as far as from Sicily. P. VALE-RIUS, Son of the samous Publicola, and L. GEGA-

NIUS, Brother to the Conful, were fent with this Commission.

However, as the Tribunes continued to spread difadvantageous Reports of the Senate's Conduct with defign to raife the Multitude, the Confuls convened an Affembly of the People to undeceive them, and to let them fee by the care that had been taken of their Subfiftence, the Injustice and Malice of their Tribunes. These latter disputed with them for the right of speaking; and as in this Contest both Parties spoke at the same time, neither of them was heard. They represented in vain to the Tribunes, that they had no Power to talk directly to the People, and that their whole Function confifted in the right of Opposition, when some Offer had been made to the People contrary to their Interests: These retorted upon the Confuls, that the Senate was the only place where they had any Business to preside; and obstinately maintained, that it belonged to them, preferably to all other Magistrates, to speak in the Affemblies of the People.

These mutual Pretensions increased the Tumult; the Dispute grew warmer and warmer, and the hottest in each Party were just ready to come to Blows; when Brutus, who was but Ædile this Year, as we said before, thought this Disorder a savourable Opportunity for extending the Authority of the Tribunes, and addressing himself to the two Consuls, he promised them to appeale the Tumult, if they would give him leave to fpeak in public.

The Confuls, who in this Permission intreated of Dispute be- them by a Plebeian in presence of his Tribunes, erween the found a new Proof of their Right to preside in all ConfulGe- Assemblies of the Roman People, consented he shou'd ganius and freely speak whatever he thought fit, not doubting L. Junius, but that as he knew the Name of an Assembly of the People took in the Senators and Knights as well as the Plebeians, he wou'd bring the Tribunes off from their Pretensions of presiding in them. But Brutus had very different Thoughts, and instead of addressing addressing himself either to the People or the Tribunes, he turned to the Conful Geganius, who had been one of the Commissioners that the Senate Sent to the Mons Sacer: " Do you remember, fays he, " that when we laboured jointly to bring the two " Orders of the Republic to an Agreement, no Pa-" trician interrupted those that were appointed to " take care of the Interests of the People, nay, and that it was expresly stipulated that it shou'd be so, " to the intent that each Party might fet forth their " Reasons with the more Order and Tranquility? "I remember it very well, replied Geganius. Wherefore then, continued Brutus, do you now interrupt our Tribunes, whose Persons are Sacred, and who are invested with a public Magistracy? "We interrupt them justly, answered Geganius, " because having ourselves convened the Assembly, " according to the Privilege of our Dignity it be-" longs to us to speak. The Conful added too rashly, and without thinking of the Consequences, Impru-That if the Tribunes had convened the Assembly, he dence of wou'd have been so far from interrupting them, that be Geganius. wou'd not so much as come to bear what they said, the' merely as a Roman Citizen, he had a Right to be present at all Assemblies of the People.

Brutus no fooner heard thefe last Words, but he Artifice of cried out in a Transport of Joy, " The Victory is L. Junius, vours, O Plebeians; Tribunes, give way to the "Confuls; let them speak to-day as much as they " please, to-morrow I will show you what the Dignity and Power of your Office is; only take care,

" that the People repair hither betimes in the Morning by your Orders, and by your convoking.

" If I abuse their Confidence in yours, I am ready " to expiate these rash Promises with the Forseit of " my Life.

The Affembly was forced to break up. Night coming on during these Contentions; the People went away impatient to fee the Effect of Brutus's Promises; and the Patricians retired on their Parts, despising despising the Boasts of a private Man, unable as they thought to give any greater Extent to the Function of Tribune, than the single Privilege of Opposition that had been granted upon the Mons Sacer.

But BRUTUS, more cunning than the Senate imagined, went to the Tribune Icilius; he spent part of the Night in confulting with him, and his Colleagues and he let them into his Defigns. " All we " have to do, fays he to them, is to convince the ec People that the Tribuneship can be of no manner of use to them, unless the Tribunes have Power to convene the Assemblies, in order to represent to them whatever may concern their Interests; the " People will never refuse to pass a Law which can-" not but be advantageous to them; all the Difficulty lies in preventing the Senate and Patricians " that might oppose it: For this purpose we must " hold the Affembly as early as possible, and pos-" fefs ourselves betimes of all the Avenues to the " Rostrum. His Colleagues having approved his Scheme, fent into the feveral Parts of the City to follicite the principal Plebeians to repair to the Forum by break of Day, with as many of their Friends as they cou'd possibly get together. The Tribunes on their parts were there before Morning, and according to Brutus's Advice, instantly took Possession of the Temple of Vulcan, where those who intended to fpeak usually placed themselves. An innumerable Multitude of People had quickly crowded the Forum. Icilius took upon him to speak: and in order to revive the Bitterness and Animosity in Mens Minds, he began with fumming up all that the People had fuffered from the Avarice and Inhumanity of the Great, before the Establishment of the Tribuneship. He then represented, that the public Misery wou'd never have had an end, if two Citizens had not been found, that had Courage enough to stand up against the Tyranny of the Patricians. That after the Abolition of the Debts, those very Patricians had taken Advantage of the Famine, to bring the People

People once more into Slavery, and that they endeavoured to hinder the Tribunes from speaking in the Assemblies, for fear they shou'd give the People light into their true Interests. That this open Tyranny render'd the Tribuneship of no Effect; and that the People must either of their own Accord renounce their Magistrature, or by a new Law give Authority to their Magistrates to convene Assemblies, to deliberate concerning their Rights, and that then it shou'd be unlawful upon the severest Penalties to interrupt or disturb them in the Execution of their Office:

This Discourse was received as usual with great The People immediately cried out that he shou'd propose the Law himself. He had prepared it the Night before, and had taken care to get it ready, for fear that if they were obliged to defer the Publication of it till the next Affembly, the Senate and Patricians wou'd be there to oppose it. He read it aloud, and it was conceived in these terms.

"That no man presume to interrupt a Tribune Year of " that is speaking in the Assembly of the Roman Rome

People. If any one break this Law, he shall 262. or presently give Bail to pay the Fine to which he 431,432.

" shall be condemned: If he refuses, he shall be Law in " put to Death, and his Goods confiscated.

The People gave Force to this Law by their Suf- the Tri-The Confuls having shewn an Intention to reject it, alledging that it was a Law procured by mere Surprize, and in an Affembly held by ftealth, without Auspices, and without being called by any lawful Authority; the Tribunes resolutely declared that they wou'd have no more respect to the Decrees of the Senate, than the Senate should have for this Plebiscitum. This was the Subject of many Disputes, which were managed with nothing but Reproaches on each fide, but without ever coming to Acts of Violence. At length the Senate, like a good Father, gave way to the Obstinacy of the Plebeians, whom whom it always looked upon as its Children. The Law was received with a general Confent of the two Orders; the People, fatisfied with having enlarged the Power of their Tribunes, bore the Famine patiently; and still retained so much Equity in their distress, as to pay a Veneration to those Great Men, that had withstood them with so much Courage and Firmness.

The City remained for some time in quiet; but Plenty produced what Famine cou'd not; and a Fleet laden with Corn, and which arrived upon the Roman Coast, gave the Tribunes a new occasion of extending their Power, and of rekindling Sedition.

A fresh Sedition of the Tribunes. Year of Rome 262.

P. Valerius and L. Geganius, whom the Senate had employed to go to Sicily, as we faid before, returned with a great number of Ships laden with Corn, under the Consulate of M. MINUTIUS and Gelo, Tyrant of Sicily, had A. SEMPRONIUS. made a Present of the greater part of it, and the Envoys of the Senate had bought the remainder with the Public Money: The question now was, what Price to fet upon it; the Tribunes were called into the Senate to give their Opinion; those Senators whose only aim was to restore a perfect intelligence between the People and the Senate, were for distributing gratis among the Poor that Corn which they owed to the Liberality of Gelo, and for felling at a moderate rate that which they had bought with the public Treasure. But when it came to Corio-LANUS'S turn to speak, that Senator, to whom the Institution of the Tribuneship was odious, maintained that this condescension in the Senate to the Necesfities of the People only encouraged them in their Infolence; that they shou'd never keep them to their Duty any longer than they were in Indigence, and that the time was now come to avenge the Majesty of the Senate, violated by a feditious Multitude, whose Leaders with an addition of Guilt had extorted Dignities for themselves, as a reward for their Rebellion.

Rebellion. It was thus this Senator declared himfelf in the very presence of the Tribunes.

But before we proceed to the confequences of this Affair, I think it will be absolutely necessary to give some further knowledge of a Man, that is to act so great a part in this passage of our History, and whose Fortune was more Glorious than Happy.

r

h

e

1-ir

ir

d

2, t-

n.

CAIUS MARTIUS CORIOLANUS Was descended Character from one of the most illustrious Patrician Families in of Coriola. Rome. He received the Sirname of Coriolanus for Plut. in having taken, Sword in Hand, Corioli one of the Coriol. chief Towns of the Volsci. Having lost his Father in his Infancy, he was educated with great care by his Mother Veturia, a Woman of austere Virtue, who had omitted no Methods to inspire her own Sentiments into her Son.

CORIOLANUS was wife, frugal, difinterested, of a strict Probity, and an inviolable Adherer to the Observation of the Laws. With these Pacific Virtues there never was known a more exalted Valour. or fuch a capacity for the Art of War; he feemed to have been born a General; but he was harsh and imperious in his Command; as fevere to other Men as to himself; a generous Friend, an implacable Enemy; too haughty for a Republic. Satisfied with the uprightness of his own Intentions, he went on directly to what was Good, without making use of that Art and those Infinuations which are so necesfary in a State founded upon Equality and Moderation. He had demanded the Confulship the preceding Year, and most of the Senators being of Opinion that so great a Captain wou'd do very signal Services to the State, if he were invested with that Dignity, had used their Interest in his Favour. recommendation of the Great was a fufficient impediment in the minds of the People. The Tribunes, who dreaded the extraordinary Courage and great Firmness of CORIOLANUS, had represented to the Plebeians the Solicitations of the Senate as a private I 2 Conspiracy Confpiracy against their Order, which had made the People refuse him their Voices. This Denial he laid extremely to Heart; and he conceived the sharpest Resentment of it, which he shewed upon this occasion. " If the People, said he in full Senus's proud" nate, expect to have a share in our Liberalities.

Coriola-Speech.

" if they think to have Provisions at a moderate " Price, let them restore to the Senate its Ancient

" Rights, and wipe out the very Footsteps of the " last Seditions. Why must I behold in the Forum,

" and at the Head of the People, Magistrates unknown to our Fathers, forming as it were two " different Republicks within the Walls of one and " the fame City? Shall I fuffer a Sicinius, a Brutus " to reign imperiously in Rome, I that cou'd not " endure to fee her ruled by Kings? Shall I be forced to look with fear upon Tribunes, that owe their Power to nothing but our Weakness? Let " us no longer bear fo great an Indignity; but let " us restore to our Consuls the just Authority, which "they ought to have over all that call themselves by the Roman Name. If Sicinius is discontented

" at this, let him retire once more with those Re" bels that feed his Infolence and Support his Ty-" ranny. The Way of the Mons Sacer is still open

" to him; we want no Subjects, but what are Obedient and Peaceful, and we had much better be without them, than share the Government and

" Dignities of the State with a vile Rabble.

Confequen-Speech.

Liv. Dec.

1. 1. 2.

The oldest Senators, and those especially who ces of that had managed the last Accommodation, thought this vehement Speech more Haughty than Prudent. The young Senators, on the contrary, who did not forefee the Confequences of it, gave it the highest Commendations. All, Admirers of Coriolanus's Virtue. cried out that he was the only Man that had the Courage of a true Roman: They repented and were ashamed of the Consent they had given to the erection of the Tribuneship, as a scandalous piece of Cowardice: They talked openly of Abolishing it;

and the Majority were for re-establishing the Government upon its Ancient Foundations.

S

1

n

e

d

0

is ne

e-

1-

e,

ne

re

C-

of

t;

nd

The Tribunes, whom the Confuls had fent for Liv. Dec. into the Senate, as we faid before, feeing this kind 1. 1, 2. of Conspiracy against their Order, went out in the greatest Fury, publickly invoking the Gods, who were Avengers of Perjury, and calling them to bear witness of the Solemn Oaths by which the Senate had given Authority to the Establishment of the Tribuneship. They affembled the People tumultuously, and cried aloud from the Rostrum, that the Patricians had made a League to destroy them, their Wives and Children, unless the Plebeians delivered their Tribunes chained into the Hands of CORIOLA-NUS; that he was a fecond Tyrant rifing up in the Republick, and aimed either at their Deaths or Slavery. wither Sw

The People take fire immediately; they utter a thoufand confused Cries full of Indignation and Threats. Rome, but just delivered from one Tumult, beholds another Sedition approaching more dangerous than the former. No body thinks now of retiring upon the Mons Sacer; the People, who had as it were made a trial of their Strength, intend to dispute the Empire of Rome with the Patricians in the middle of Rome it felf: They talk of no lefs than going directly and tearing Coriolanus out of the Senate, to facrifice him to the public Hatred. But the Tribunes, who were for a more fecure way of destroying him, that is to fay, by pretending to observe the Forms of Justice, fent him a Summons to come and answer for his Behaviour before the Assembly of the Coriolanus People; thinking by this means, that if he obeyed, summon'd. they shou'd be the Masters and Arbiters of the Life of their Enemy; or that they shou'd make him more odious to the People, if he refused to acknowledge their Authority.

CORIOLANUS, naturally Proud and Resolute, ha- Tumult. ving sent back their Officer with Contempt, as the Tribunes foresaw he wou'd, these immediately went 1. 7.

I 3 with

with a Gang of the most mutinous among the Plebeians, and waited for him at the Door of the Senate, in order to seize him when he shou'd come out. They met him attended as usual with a Crowd of his Clients, and a great number of young Senators who had a respect for his Person, and thought it an Honour to follow his Opinion in the Senate, and his Example in War. The Tribunes no sooner saw him, but they order'd Brutus and Icilius, who this Year personned the Office of Adiles, to lead him to Prison. But it was not easy to execute such a Commission, and the Enterprize was as daring as it D. H. ib. was extraordinary. Coriolanus and his Friends fland upon their Defence. They beat back the Ædiles with their Fifts: No other Arms were used in those Days, in a City where the Inhabitants never put on the Sword, but when they marched out against the Enemy. The Tribunes, enraged at this Refistance, call the People to their Aid; the Patrieians on their fide run to the Affistance of one of the most illustrious of their Body. The Tumult increafes; they fall to Abuses and Reproaches. The Tribunes complain that a mere private Man should dare to violate a facred Magistracy. The Senators in their turn demand by what Authority they prefume to arrest a Senator, and a Patrician of an Order superior to the People, and whether they meant to fet themselves up for Tribunes of the Senate, as they were of the People. During these Contentions the Confuls came in and dispersed the Multitude; and as much by Intreaties as Authority prevailed upon

But the Tribunes did not stop here; they convened the Assembly for the next Morning. The Confuls and Senate, seeing the People run to the Forum at the very break of Day, repaired thither too with all Diligence, to prevent the ill Designs of these seditious Magistrates, and to hinder them from bringing the People whom they governed to take some hasty Resolution contrary to the Dignity of the Senate, the People to retire.

and

and the Safety of Coriolanus. Their Presence did not keep those Tribunes from inveighing, as usual, against the whole Order of Patricians. Then turning the Accusation against Coriolanus, they reported the Words he had fpoke in the Senate relating to the Distribution of the Corn.

n

is

n

n

.

)

They also urged as another Crime in him, the great number of Friends, which his Virtue drew about his Person, and whom the Tribunes call'd the Tyrant's Guard. "It was by his Order, faid they, " addressing themselves to the People, that your " Ædiles were infulted. He fought by those first "Blows only to engage us in a Quarrel; and if we " had not shewn more Moderation than he, per-" haps a Civil War might have armed your Ci-" tizens one against another. After having spent themselves in Invectives to make Coriolanus more odious to the People, they added, that if there was any Patrician who wou'd undertake his Defence, he might mount the Rostrum and speak to the People.

Minutius the first Conful offered himself; and af- Idem. 1.7. ter having complained in general, and with abun- The prudance of Moderation, of those who catch'd at the dent Behaleast Pretence to raise new Disturbances in the Re- viour of the Conful publick; he remonstrated to the People, that there Minutius. was fo far from being any ground of accusing the Senate and Patricians of having caused the Famine, that every body knew that Calamity was occasion'd only by the Defertion of the People, and by the Fault of those, who the Year before had neglected to cultivate and fow their Lands. That he cou'd with the same Ease destroy the other Calumnies, with which their Ears were fill'd by feditious Harangues, as that the Senate had laid a Defign to abolish the Tribuneship, and to cause the whole People to perish by Famine. That in order to efface at once a Report fo false and injurious, he declared to them that D. H.1.7. the Senate again confirmed the Power of the Tribunes, with all the Privileges that had been granted to them upon the Mons Sacer: That as to the Diffri-I 4 bution

bution of the Corn, they made the People Judges and Mafters of that Matter, to fix what Price upon it they themselves thought fit.

The Conful, after a Preamble fo well adapted to the foftening the Minds, and winning the good Will of the People, added by way of a mild Reproach, that he cou'd not help blaming them for the Precipitation with which they fuffered themselves to be carried away by the first Reports that were spread by fome particular Incendiaries. That it was strange they shou'd go about to make the different Opinions that were offered, a Crime in the Senate, even be-

Coriola-

Minutius's fore any thing was decreed. "Remember, fays he, Speech for " that in your Retreat upon the Mons Sacer, your " whole Wishes, Petitions and Prayers were to ob-" tain the Abolition of the Debts. Scarce had you " received fo great a Favour, but you made your-" felves a kind of new Right from the Eafiness of " the Senate, to demand the Creation of two Maec giftrates of your own Body, whose whole Autho-" rity by your own Confession was to be confined " to the hindering a Patrician from oppressing a Plebeian: A new Grant, for which you returned us " the greatest Thanks, and which seemed to give " you full Content. In those troublesome Times, even when the Sedition was at the highest, you er never thought of requiring a Diminution of the "Senate's Authority, or an Alteration in the " Form of our Government. By what Right then do your Tribunes now pretend to carry their In-fpection, and give their Cenfure upon what paffes in our Deliberations? When till now was a Sena-" tor ever treated as a Criminal, for having spoke his Mind freely in the Senate? What Laws give vou Authority to profecute his Exile or his Death, as you do with fo much Animofity? But I'will " fuppose that by an unheard-of Subversion of all

" Order, the whole Body of the Senate is accountable to your Tribunes. Let us further suppose, if " you will have it so, that Coriolanus has let flip " fome " fome Words too harsh in delivering his Opinion; " are you not obliged in Equity to forget a few random Words that were loft in Air, for the fake of 46 his real Services, of which you yourselves have reap'd all the Fruit? Save the Life of fo excellent " a Citizen, fave fo great a Captain for your Coun-" try; and if you will not acquit him as Innocent, " at least give him as Criminal to the whole Senate, who intreat this Favour of you by my Mouth. "This will be the Bond which uniting us more close-1 ly than ever, will be a new Motive to the Senate to continue their Goodness towards you. Whereas if you perfift in your Resolution of destroying " this Senator, perhaps the Opposition you may " meet with from the Patricians may produce Calamities that may make you repent of having

" pushed your Resentment too far,

" he thought to destroy.

This Discourse made an Impression upon the Mul- Artifice of titude, and brought them to an Inclination for Peace Sicinius and Union. Sicinius was furprifed and confounded against at this Turn: But diffembling his ill Defigns, he nus. gave great Praises to Minutius and all the Senators, for having been pleased to condescend so far as to account to the People for their Conduct, and for not having difdained to interpose their Prayers and good Offices in favour of CORIOLANUS, Then turning to the Senator: " And you, excellent Citizens, fays " he in an ironical Tone, will you not still defend before the People that Advice foufeful to the Pub-" lic, which you proposed so boldly in the Senate? " Or rather why have you not Recourse to the Cle-" mency of the Roman People? It is likely Co-" RIOLANUS thinks it below his Courage to debase "himself so far, as to ask Pardon of those whom

The artful Tribune spoke to him in this manner, because he was perswaded that a Man of Coriola-Nus's Character, who was incapable of stooping or changing his Opinion, wou'd provoke the People afresh by the Haughtiness of his Answers. He was not deceived in his Hopes; for CORIOLANUS was fo far from owning himself guilty, or endeavouring to pacify the People, as Minutius had done, that on the contrary he quite destroyed the Effect of that Conful's Speech, by an ill-timed Resoluteness, and by the Harshness of his Expressions. He inveighed more violently than ever against the Enterprizes of the Tribunes, and declared boldly that the People had no Right to judge a Senator: But that if any Man was offended at what he had faid in the Senate he might fummon him before the Confuls and the Senators, whom he acknowledged for his Natural Judges, and before whom he shou'd be always ready to give an Account of his Behaviour.

The young Senators, charmed with his Intrepidity, and overjoyed to have a Man that durst speak openly what they all thought, cried out, that he had advanced nothing but what was conformable to the Laws: But the People, who thought themselves defpised, resolved to make him feel their Power. They immediately proceeded to his Tryal as a Rebel, and a Citizen that refused to acknowledge the Authority of the Roman People. Sicinius, after having confulted apart with his Colleagues, without fo much as giving himself the Trouble to collect the Voices of Coriolanus the Assembly, pronounced Sentence of Death upon condemn'd. him, and ordered him to be thrown down from the Top of the Tarpeian Rock; a Punishment which they inflicted upon such as were Enemies of their Country.

Plut. in

Cor.

The Ædiles, who were the usual Ministers of all the Violences of the Tribunes, drew near to lay hold of his Person; but the Senate and all the Patricians in the Affembly ran to his Affistance; they placed D.H.1.7. him in the midst of them, and making Arms of whatever their Indignation and Rage offered to them, they feemed refolutely determined to oppose Force with Force.

The People, who are always afraid of those who do not fear them, refused to give Assistance to their Ædiles.

Ædiles, and remained in a kind of Suspence; either not daring to attack a Body in which they saw their Magistrates and Captains, or thinking their Tribunes had carried their Animosity too far, in condemning a Citizen to Death for mere Words. Sicinius, who was asraid Coriolanus wou'd escape him, called aside Brutus, his Counsellor and his Oracle, as seditious as himself but less hasty, and whose Schemes were deeper laid. He privately asked him his Opinion upon this Irresolution in the People which broke all his measures.

Brutus told him, that he must never think of destroying Coriolanus fo long as he was guarded by the whole Body of the Nobility; that it had even occasion'd a Murmur in the Assembly, that he shou'd pretend to be both Judge and Party at the fame time; that the People, who turn in an Instant from the most violent Fury to Sentiments of Compassion, looked upon his being condemn'd to die to be too rigorous a Sentence; that in the Disposition which Mens Minds feemed to be in, he certainly wou'd never fucceed by Methods of Violence; but that with the old and specious Pretence of desiring to do nothing but what was according to the Forms of Justice, he shou'd demand of the Senate, that CORIOLANUS shou'd be tried by the Assembly of the People; and above all, he shou'd at any rate get the Assembly to be convened by Tribes, wherein the Voices were reckoned by their Number, and the Great and Rich were mingled with the Poor; whereas if they gave their Votes by Centuries, it was to be fear'd the rich Patricians, who cou'd themselves make a Majority, wou'd fave COROLIANUS.

Sicinius being resolved to follow this Advice, made a Sign to the People, that he was going to speak: And Silence being made for him: "You see, O Romans, says he, that it is not the Fault of the Patricians, that much Blood is not shed this Day, and that they are ready to come to the greatest Extremities to rescue the declared Enemy of the « Roman

" Roman People out of the Hands of Justice. But it is our Duty to set them better Examples: We " will do nothing rashly. Tho' the Criminal is sufficiently convicted by his own Confession, we yet

" are willing to give him Time to prepare his Defence. We cite thee, added he, addressing him-

" felf to Coriolanus, to appear before the People in Seven and twenty Days. As for the Diffribu-care of that Matter, the Tribunes will give Directions about it themselves. And with this he adjourned the Assembly.

The Senate, during this Interval, to take off the Bitterness of the People, fixed the Price of Corn at the lowest Rate that it ever had been at even before the Sedition, and the Confuls entered into Conference with the Tribunes upon the Affair of CORIOLANUS, in hopes to appeale them, and to bring these popular Magistrates to conform to the Ancient Rules of the Government. Minutius, who spoke for the rest, represented to them that ever fince the Foundation of Rome, that Respect had always been paid to the Senate, that no Affair was ever referred to the Judgment of the People, any otherwise than by a Senatusconfultum: That the Kings themselves had always had this Deference for fo August a Body. He exhorted them to conform to the Usage of their Anceftors. But that if they had any confiderable Grievances to lay to the Charge of CORIOLANUS, they shou'd apply to the Senate, who wou'd do them Juflice, and who, according to the Nature of the Crime, and the Solidity of their Proofs, wou'd refer it by a Senatusconfultum to the Judgment of the People, who then, and not till then, wou'd have a Right to try a Citizen.

Sicinius withstood this Proposal with his usual Infolence, and declared that he wou'd never suffer the Authority of the Roman People to be decided by a Senatusconfulium. His Colleagues, who meant as ill as he did, but who were more skilful in the Conduct of their Designs, plainly found they shou'd make themselves odious even to the Plebeians, if they so publickly deviated from the usual Forms of Justice: thus they obliged Sicinius to defift from his Opposition, under pretence of doing it out of Deference for the Confuls. But this feeming Complaifance was of fo much the less moment, as they had taken a firm Resolution, if the Senatusconsultum was not such as they defired, to make use of the Lex Valeria, in order to appeal to the Affembly of the People, by which means this Affair was still to come before their Tribunal: fo that the whole Ouestion was whether it shou'd be carried thither in the first or second Instance.

Thus the Tribunes readily agreed, that the Senate shou'd decide as usual, whether the People shou'd take Cognizance of this Accusation; and they only defired, that they might be heard in the Senate with relation to the Grievances which they pretended they had to lay to the Charge of the Person accused.

The Confuls and the Tribunes having agreed upon this Preliminary Form, those Magistrates of the People were the next Day introduced into the Senate. Decius, one of those Tribunes, tho' the youngest, spoke for the rest; and that Honour was done him because of his Eloquence, and the Readiness with which he expressed himself in public; a Qualification absolutely necessary in all popular Governments, and especially at Rome, where the Talent of Elocution was no less requisite in order to obtain Advancement, than Courage and Valour. That Tribune addressing The Trihimself to the whole Senate, "You know, Conscript bune De-Fathers, fays he, that having driven out the Kings cius speaks by our Assistance, you established in the Republic in the Se-the Form of Government which we now observe, " and of which we do not complain. But you can" not be ignorant too, that in all the Differences which any poor Plebeian had afterwards with a Noble or Patrician, that Plebeian constantly lost

" his Cause, his Adversaries being his Judges, all the Tribunals being filled with none but Patriec cians.

cians. This Abuse was what made P. Valerius Publicola, that wife Consul, and excellent Citizen, eftablish the Law which granted an Appeal

" to the People from the Decrees of the Senate, and " the Judgments of the Confuls. " Such is the Law called Valeria, which has always been looked upon as the Basis and Founda-" tion of the public Liberty. It is to this Law " that we now fly for Redress, if you refuse us the " Tuffice we demand upon a Man blackened with " the greatest Crime that it is possible to commit in a Republic. It is not a fingle Plebeian complaining; here is the whole Body of the Roman Peoof ple, demanding the Condemnation of a Tyrant "that has gone about to destroy his Fellow-citizens by Famine, that has violated our Magistracy, and by forcible Methods driven back our Officers. of and the Ædiles of the Commonwealth, CORIO-" LANUS is the Man we accuse of having proposed "the Abolition of the Tribuneship, a Magistracy " made facred by the most folemn Oaths. What e need is there then for a Senatusconfultum to profe-" cute a Crime like this? Does not every Man " know that those particular Decrees of the Senate er are requifite only in unforeseen and extraordinary " Affairs, and for which the Laws have as yet made " no Provision? But in the present Case, where the "Law is fo direct, where it so expresly devotes to the infernal Gods those that infringe it; is it not er making one felf an Accomplice in the Crime to " hesitate in the least? Are you not apprehensive " that these affected Delays in pronouncing Sentence " upon the Criminal, upon pretence of an imagina-

" I know that feveral among you complain it was merely by Violence that we extorted your Confent for the Abolition of the Debts, and the Establishment of the Tribuneship. I will even suppose

" ry necessity of a Senatusconsultum, will make the People inclined to believe that Coriolanus on-

" fuppose that in the high Degree of Power to " which you had raifed your felves fince the Expul-" fion of the Kings, it was neither convenient nor " honourable for you to yield up part of it in fa-" vour of the People; but you have done it, and " the whole Senate is bound by the most folemn " Oaths never to undo it. After the Establishment of those facred Laws, which render the Persons of our Tribunes inviolable, will you out of com-" pliance to the first ambitious Man that arises, attempt to revoke what indeed makes the Security " and Peace of the State? Certainly you never will; " and I dare answer for you, so long as I behold in " this Affembly those venerable Magistrates that had " fo great a Share in the Treaty made upon the Mons " Sacer. Ought fo great a Crime be fuffered to be " brought fo much as into Deliberation? CORIOLA-" Nus is the first that by his seditious Advice en-"deavoured to break those facred Bonds which, in virtue of the Laws, unite the feveral Orders of the State. It is he alone that is for destroying the "Tribunitian Power, the People's Afylum, the Bul-" wark of our Liberty, and the Pledge of our Re-" union. In order to force the People's Confent, he endeavours to effect one Crime by means of a " greater. He has dared in a Holy Place, and in " the midst of the Senate, to propose to suffer the " People to die of Hunger. Cruel and unthinking " Man at the same time! did he not consider that " the People whom he meant to exterminate with fo " much Inhumanity, who are more numerous and copowerful than he cou'd wish, being reduced to De-" spair, wou'd have broken into the Houses of the "Rich, forced open those Granaries and those Cel-" lars which concealed fo much Wealth; and that " either they would have fallen under the Power of " the Patricians, or that thefe latter wou'd themselves have been totally rooted out by an enraged Popu-" lace, who then wou'd have hearkened to no Law 66 but

but what was dictated to them by their Necessity

46 and Resentment. For that you may not be unacquainted with the "Truth, we wou'd not have perished by a Famine brought upon us by our Enemies. But after having taken to witness the Gods, Avengers of Injustice, we wou'd have filled Rome with Blood and Slaughter. Such had been the fatal Success of the Coun-" fels of that perfidious Citizen, if some Senators, who " had more Love for their Country, had not hindered them from taking Effect. It is to you, Confcript Fathers, that we address our just Complaints. It is your Aid, and the Wisdom of your Decrees, " that we call upon to oblige this public Enemy to appear before the whole Roman People affertibled " by Tribes to answer for his pernicious Counfels. It " is there, Coriolanus, that thou must defend thy for-" mer Sentiments, if thou darest so to do, or excuse them as proceeding from want of Thought: Take " my Advice; leave thy haughty and tyrannical " Maxims; make thyself less; become like us; nay put on Habits of Mourning, which are fo confor-" mable to the present State of thy Fortune. Im-of plore the Pity of thy Fellow-citizens, and perhaps "thou may'st obtain their Favour, and the For" giveness of thy Faults.

This Tribune having left off speaking, the Confuls asked the Opinion of the Assembly: They began with the Confulars and the oldest Senators; for in those Days, fays Dionysius Halicarnasseus, the young Senators were not fo prefumptuous as to think themfelves capable of instructing their Seniors. Those young Men who were modest and reserved, without daring to speak, only declared their Opinion by some Sign, or by going over to that Side which they thought most just. It was from this respectful way of declaring their Minds, that they were called Sena-

The Peda- tores Pedarii, (from the Latin Pes, a Foot) because rian Sena-their Opinion was known only by the Side which they went (or walk'd) over to: Thus it was a com-

L. 7. 2. 453. mon Saying, that a Pedarian Opinion was like a Head without a Tongue.

All the Senators waited, out of different Motives, fome with Defire, and others with Uneafiness, to hear how Appius Claudius wou'd declare himself. When it was his Turn to speak, "You know, Conscript Appius's "Fathers, says he, that I have long and frequently Speach

"Fathers, fays he, that I have long and frequently Speech opposed, even alone, the Ease with which you against the " grant the People whatever they demand. I know not whether I have not been even troublesome in

" repeating to you the fatal Presages which I drew

" from the Union that was proposed to you with those Deserters of the Commonwealth. The Event

" has but too truly answered my just Suspicions.

"The share of the Magistracy which you yielded up to those seditious Men, is now turned against yourselves. The people punishes you by means " of your own Favours; they take Advantage of your Goodness to ruin your Authority. 'Tis in vain you try to hide even from yourselves the Dan" ger which the Senate is in; you cannot but fee that their Defign is to change the ancient Form of our "Government: The Tribunes, to bring about their

" private Views, make gradual Advances to the Tyranny. At first they demanded only the Aboli" tion of the Debts; and this People, who are now fo haughty, and who endeavour to make them-

" felves the supreme Judges of the Senators, then

" thought they ftood in need of a Pardon, for the

" difrespectful manner in which they sued for that

" first Concession.

-

y

y

y

1-

h

1-

n

"Your Easiness gave Occasion to new Pretenfions; the people wou'd have their particular Magistrates. You know how earnestly I opposed these Innovations; but in spight of all I cou'd do, you affented in this Point also; you allowed the People to have Tribunes, that is to say, perpetual Ringleaders of Sedition. The People intoxicated with Fury, wou'd even have this new Magistracy confectated in a particular manner, which had " never

« and

never been allowed to the Confulship itself, the " first Dignity in the Republic. The Senate conse fented to every thing, not fo much out of Kindness for the People, as want of Resolution; the Person of the Tribunes was declared facred and in-" violable, and a Law made to that Effect. " People required that it shou'd be confirmed with the most solemn Oaths; and that Day, my Fathers, you fwore upon the Altars the Destruction of your felves and Children. What has been the " Fruit of all these Favours? Your Easiness has on-" ly ferved to make you contemptible in the Eyes of the People, and to increase the Pride and Info-" lence of their Tribunes. They now begin to fet " up new Rights for themselves; and these modern " Magistrates, who ought to live merely like private Men, take upon them to convene the Assemblies " of the People, and without our Privity procure " Laws to be enacted by the Voices of a base Rabble. "And yet it is to fo odious a Tribunal that they now summon a Patrician, a Senator, a Citizen of " your Order, in a word, Coriolanus, that great Captain, and withal that good Man, yet more illustri-" ous for his Adherence to the Interests of the Senate " than for his Valour. They presume to make it a " Crime in a Senator to speak his Opinion in full "Senate, with that Freedom which is fo becoming " a Roman; and if you yourselves had not been his "Buckler and Defence, they had affaffinated, even " in your Presence, one of your most illustrious Ci-" tizens. The Majesty of the Senate was just going " to be violated by fo base a Murder; the Respect " due to your Dignity was quite forgot, and you your " felves were lofing your Liberty and Empire. "The Refolution and Courage which you shewed upon this last Occasion, in some measure awak-" ed these Madmen from their drunken fit. They " feem now to be ashamed of a Crime that they cou'd not compleat; they defift from the violent Methods which they found wou'd not fucceed, and feemingly have recourse to Justice, and the Rules of the Law.

"But what is this Justice, immortal Gods, which these Men of Blood wou'd introduce! they endea-

" vour by submissive Means to surprise you into a Senatusconsultum, that may give them Power to drag the best Citizen of Rome to Punishment.

"They alledge the Lex Valeria as the Rule of your Conduct; but does not every body know, that

"this Law, which allows of Appeals to the Assembly of the People, relates only to such poor Plebeians, as being destitute of all other Protection,

S

n

e

e.

y

of te

: a ıll

ng

115 en

ing

ect

ur

W-ık-

ney

ney

ent

ed,

and

" might be oppressed by the Credit of a strong Cabal? The Text of the Law is plain; it expresly fays, That a Citizen condemned by the Confuls

" should have Liberty to appeal to the People. Pub" licola by this Law only gave an Asylum to those " unhappy Men that had reason to complain of having been condemned by prejudiced Judges. The " Design of the Law was only to have their Causes

" heard over again; and when you afterwards confented to the Creation of the Tribunes, neither you, nor even the People themselves, ever intend-

" ed any thing more in the Establishment of these

" new Magistrates, than that this Law might be fur-

" nish'd with Protectors, and the Poor with Advocates that might prevent their being oppressed by " the Great. What relation is there between such a "Law, and the Case of a Senator of an Order su" perior to the People, and who is accountable for his Conduct to none but the Senate? To shew that the Lex Valeria relates only to private Plebeians;

" for about seventeen Years that it has been made,

et let Decius only give me an Instance of one single

" Patrician that was ever called in Judgment before

"the People by vertue of that Law, and our Dif-

" pute will be at an End. And indeed what Justice

" wou'd there be in delivering up a Senator to the Fury of the Tribunes, and to suffer the People to " be Judges in their own Cause; as if their tumul-

K 2

" tuous

tuous Affemblies, directed by fuch feditious Magi-" strates, cou'd be without Prejudice, without Hatred, and without Passion? Thus, O Fathers, it is " my Advice, that before you determine upon any thing, you maturely weigh that in this Affair your Interests are inseparable from those of Coriolanus; " for the rest, I am not for your revoking the Favours you have granted the People, by whatever " Means they obtained them; but I cannot forbear exhorting you to refuse boldly for the future whatever they shall think to get of you contrary to vour own Authority, and the Form of our Govern-er ment. It is plain by these two opposite Speeches of Decius and Appius, that the Business of CORIOLANUS was only used as a Colour to Affairs of greater Importance. The true Cause of the Dispute and Animosity between the two Parties was this. That the Nobles and Patricians affirmed, that by the Expulsion of the Kings they succeeded in their Authority, and that the Government ought to be purely Aristocratic; whereas the Tribunes, by new Laws endeavoured to turn it into a Democracy, and to bring the whole Authority into the Hands of the People, whom they governed as they pleased. Thus Ambition, Interest, and Jealoufy, animated the two Parties, and made the wifest Men apprehensive of a new Separation, or of a Civil War.

Pacific of Valeri-

This was what M. Valerius, that Consular who Sentiments had been fo serviceable in the Agreement upon the Mons Sacer, represented to the Senate in Terms equally strong and moving. He was a true Republican, and was displeased to see the Nobles and all those of his Order constantly affecting a Distinction and Power ever odious in a free State. As he was Mafter of a fweet infinuating Eloquence, he first spoke much in general of the Benefits of Peace, and of the Necessity of preferving Union in the Republic. Then he proceeded to the Affair of CORIOLANUS, and declared himself for referring the Cognizance of it to the Asfembly fembly of the People. He maintained that the Senate, by letting go fome little of its Authority, wou'd fecure the Duration of it; that it wou'd be ftronger if it were less, and that nothing was more likely to disarm the Peoples Rage against that illustrious Criminal, than the granting them the Judgment of him: That the Multitude, charm'd with such Condescension, wou'd abstain from condemning a Man whom they knew to be so dear to the Senate: And that to appease them compleatly, he wou'd have all the Senators disperse themselves among the Assembly, and each endeavour by a more gentle and popular Behaviour, to win over the Plebeians he was acquainted with.

Valerius then turning to Coriolanus, befought Valerius, him in the most tender manner to give Peace to the Speech to Republic: "Go, Coriolanus, says he, offer your coriolanus, says he, offer

" felf generously to the People's Judgment; this is the only way of justifying your felf that is worthy of you; this is the furest Means to silence those

LS

-

y

25

ne

at

;

to 1-

y

t,

de

or ho

he

ly

nd

his ver

fa

in ity

ro-

red

Af-

oly

" who accuse you of aiming at the Tyranny. The "People, moved with beholding to great a Soul bending under the Power of their Tribunes, can

" never bring themselves to pronounce Sentence of Condemnation upon CORIOLANUS; whereas if " you perfift in shewing a Contempt for that Tribu-

" nal, if you decline their Justice, and continue ob" stinately resolute to be tryed only by the Confuls,

" you will occasion a Contest between the Senate and

" the People, and kindle a dreadful Sedition. You

" alone will be the fatal Torch; and who can tell how far the Flame may run? Set before your Eyes

" the frightful Image of a Civil War; the Laws

" without Force; the Magistrates without Power; Fury and Violence possessing both Parties; Fire

" and Sword gleaming on all Sides, and your Fellow-

" citizens murdering each other: The Wife calling

" upon you for her Husband, the Father for his Children; all loading you with Imprecations.

" Lastly, set before your Eyes Rome, to whom the

X

"Gods have promifed fo glorious a Deftiny, finking "under the Rage of the two Parties, and buried be-

" neath her own Ruins.

Valerius, who fincerely loved his Country, foftned by the Idea of these great Calamities, cou'd not restrain his Tears, which fell in spite of himself; and the Tears of a Confular, venerable for his Age and Dignities, more eloquent even than his Discourse, touched the greater part of the Senators, and disposed their Minds to Peace.

Then Valerius, finding that he was Mafter of the Affembly, raifed his Voice, and, as if he had got fresh Strength, or were become another Man, shewed himself undifguised, and spoke to them with that Authority which his Age and long Experience in Speech . the Great.

Valerius's Affairs gave him. "We are made to fear, cries he, " that the Public Liberty will be in imminent Danagainst the ce ger, if we grant so much Power to the People, and " allow them to try those of our Order that shall be " accused by the Tribunes. I am persuaded on the contrary, that nothing is more likely to preferve " it. The Republick confifts of two Orders, Patricians and Plebeians; the question is, which of " those two Orders may most fafely be trusted with " the Guardianship of that facred Depositum, our " Liberty. I maintain that it will be more fecure

" in the Hands of the People, who defire only not " to be opprest, than in those of the Nobles who " all have a violent Thirst of Dominion.

Patricians, invested with the prime Magistracies, " diftinguished by their Birth, their Wealth, and their Honours, will always be powerful enough to hold the People to their Duty: And the People, when they have the Authority of the Laws, being " naturally Haters and jealous of all exalted Power, will by their Watchfulness over the Actions of the "Great, strike the Terror of the Severity of their Iudgments into fuch of the Patricians as might be tempted to aspire to the Tyranny. You abolishes ed the Royalty, Conscript Fathers, because the " Authority e-

d

d

d

e, ed

ıe

OÈ

7-

at

in

e,

d

De

e

re

2-

h

ır

e

ot

ſe

d

0

g

r

"Authority of a fingle Man grew exorbitant. " Not fatisfied with dividing the Sovereign Power between two annual Magistrates, you gave them " befides a Council of three hundred Senators to be "Inspectors over their Conduct, and Moderators of their Authority. But this very Senate, so for-" midable to the Kings and to the Confuls, has " nothing in the Republic to balance their Power. " I know very well that hitherto, Thanks be to the "Gods, we have had all the Reason in the World " to be contented with their Moderation. But then "I know not whether we are not obliged for this " to the Fear of our Enemies abroad, and to those " continual Wars which we have been forced to " maintain; but who will be answerable that for the " future our Succeffors, growing more haughty " and more potent by a long Peace, may not make " Attempts upon the Liberty of their Country " and that in the very Senate itself some strong Fa-" ction may not arise, whose Leader may find " Ways to become the Tyrant of his Country, if "there be not at the same time out of the Senate " forne other Power, which by means of the Accu-" fations to be brought into the Affembly of the "People, may be able to withstand the ambitious " Enterprizes of the Great? " Perhaps the Question may be started, Whether the fame Inconveniency is not to be appre-

ther the Tame Inconveniency is not to be appreshed from the part of the People, and whether it is possible to make sufficient Provision, that there shall not at some time arise among the Plebeians, a Head of a Party that will abuse his Influence over the Minds of the Multitude, and under the old Pretence of defending the People's Interests, in the End oppress both their Liberty and that of the Senate? But you must needs know, that upon the least Danger which the Republic may seem to be in on that side, our Consuls have power to name a Dictator, whom they will new ver chuse but from among your own Body; that this supreme Magistrate, the absolute Master of "the Lives of his Fellow-citizens, is alone able by " his Authority to diffipate a popular Faction; and " the Wisdom of our Laws has allowed him that formidable Power but for fix Months, for fear " he shou'd abuse it, and employ in the Establish-" ment of his own Tyranny, and Authority intrusted with him only to destroy that of any other ambitious Men. Thus, added Valerius, with a " mutual Inspection the Senate will be watchful over the Behaviour of the Confuls, the People over that of the Senate; and the Dictator, when the State of Affairs requires the Interpolition of fuch " an Office, will ferve as a Curb to the Ambition of both. The more Eyes that there are upon the "Conduct of every Branch of our Legislature, the more fecure will be our Liberty, and the more " perfect our Constitution.

The Senate Coriola-

Other Senators, who were of the fame Opinion, abandons added, that nothing was more likely to preferve their Liberty, than to allow every Roman Citizen comprised in the Census, the Privilege of impeaching before the Affembly of the People, any that shou'd violate the Laws; that this Right of Accufation wou'd not only keep the Great in Awe, but also be ferviceable in giving vent to the Murmurs of the People, which without fuch Easement might run up to Sedition. Thus it was refolved by Plurality of Voices to leave this Affair to the Judgment of the People. And this was the more willingly agreed to, because the Petition which the Tribunes had first made for a Senatusconfultum to empower them to profecute the Accused, wou'd, for the future, stand as a new Precedent of the Senat's Privilege and Authori-Tho' this Society knew they were about to facrifice an innocent Man to the Passion of his Enemies, the public Quiet prevailed above any private Concern, and the Senatusconfultum was immediately drawn. But before it was figned, CORIOLANUS, who found the Senate were giving him up, defired leave to speak; and having obtained it, " You know,

" Conscript Fathers, says he, addressing himself to The Com-the Senators, what the whole Course of my Life plaints has hitherto been. You know that this obstinate made by Hatred of the People, and that unjust Persecution Coriola-

" which I now fuffer from it, are occasioned only by the inviolable Zeal which I have always shewn of for the Interest of this Body. I will not infist upon the Returns I now meet with; the Event will

" fhew the Weakness and perhaps the Malice of the "Confuls which are given you in this Affair. But

" fince Valerius's Opinion has at length prevailed,

" let me know at least what is the Crime that I am

" charged with, and upon what Conditions I am delivered over to the Fury of my Adversaries.

CORIOLANUS faid this to find out whether the D. H. 1. Tribunes would ground their Accusation upon the 7. p. 462, Speech he had made in full Senate. This was indeed the only Cause of the Rage of the Tribunes against that Senator, whom they cou'd never forgive the Proposal he had made to abolish the Tribuneship; but as they fear'd they shou'd make themselves too odious to the Senate, if they pretended to call every Senator to account for the Opinions he shou'd give in the public Deliberations, they declared, after conferring together, that they wou'd confine their whole Accusation to the single Crime of Tyranny.

"If it be fo, reply'd Coriolanus, and I have nothing to clear myself of but a Calumny so ill- grounded, I freely yield myself to the Judgment of the People, and do not oppose the signing of the Senatusconsultum. The Senate was not displeased to see the Affair take this turn, and that no mention wou'd be made of what had passed in the last Assembly, which must have brought the Honour and Authority of their Body into the Dispute. Thus with the Consent of all Parties, the Decree was signed, allowing the Person accused seven and twenty Days to prepare his Desence. This Decree was put into the Hands of the Tribunes, and for fear lest notwithstanding their Promise they shou'd still pretend in the Affembly of the People to urge as an Article against CORIOLANUS, what he had advanced with relation to the Tribuneship, and the Price to be fixed upon Corn; they made another Senatusconsultum, discharging him from all Prosecutions that might be raifed against him upon either of those Accounts: A Precaution which the Senate took. that they might not have the Uneafiness to see it difcuffed before the People, how far the Senators might carry the Freedom of their Opinions. The Tribunes, after having read the Senate's Decree in the first Assembly of the People, exhorted all the Citizens of the Republic, as well those that dwelt in Rome, as the Inhabitants of the Country, to be at the Forum on the Day appointed for the Decision of this Business. Most of the Plebeians waited impatiently till the time shou'd come when they might fignalize their Hatred against CORIOLANUS, and they feemed as zealous against that Senator, as if his Destruction were the fafety of the Republic.

of the Tribunes.

At length the fatal Day appeared, when this great Stratagem Affair was to be decided; and an innumerable Multitude crowded the Forum extreamly betimes in the Morning. The Tribunes, who knew what they did, separated them by Tribes before the Senators came; whereas, from the Reign of Servius Tullius, the Voices had always been gathered by Centuries. This fingle Difference gave the deciding turn to this Affair, and always afterwards was fufficient to weigh down the Scale in favour either of the People or of the Patricians. The Confuls being come to the Affembly, were for keeping up the ancient Custom, not doubting but they cou'd fave CORIOLANUS if the Voices were reckoned by Centuries, in which the Patricians themselves and the richest Citizens had the Majority. But the Tribunes, no less artful, and more resolute, alledged that in an Affair which concerned the Rights of the People and the Public Liberty, Liberty, it was but just that every Citizen, without respect to Wealth or Rank, shou'd have his Vote in particular, and loudly declared they wou'd never consent that the Voices should be collected otherwise than by Tribes and by Tale. This Dispute was carried very far; but at length the Senate, who wou'd not make Coriolanus's Accusation a Contest of their own, and who were apprehensive their Authority wou'd be attacked directly, gave way as usual to the Obstinacy of the Magistrates of the People.

However, Minutius the first Consul, to hide, if possible, the Weakness and indeed the Scandal of Minutius this Conduct in the Senate, mounted the Rostrum. fore the He opened his Discourse with the Advantages flow-People in ing from Peace and Union, and the Calamities which favour of attended Discord. From these Common-Places, he Coriolaproceeded to the Affection which the Senate had for the People, and the Favours it had heaped upon them at feveral times. He declared that all the Return they asked was Coriolanus's Discharge, and exhorted the Plebeians to confider not fo much a few Words which had escaped him in the heat of his Discourse, as the important Services which that generous Citizen had done the Commonwealth: " Be " fatisfied, Romans, added he, with the Submission " of that great Man; and let it not be faid, that fo " illustrious a Citizen underwent the Forms of Ju-" flice like a Criminal. Sicinius answered, that if fuch Indulgence were to take place in the Government of States, none would be fecure. That all who had done great Services, might then attempt the most unjust Actions with Impunity. That in Monarchies the King had Power to forgive; but in Commonwealths the Laws alone governed, and those Laws deaf to all Solicitations, punished Guilt with the same Strictness of Justice, that they rewarded Virtue.

t

ıt

e

y

rs

s,

S.

is gh

ne

not

he

he

he

nd

nlic

у,

"Since, notwithstanding our Intreaties, replyed "Minutius, you obstinately insist that CORIOLA-

" Nus shall be tried by the Suffrages of the Assem" bly,

66 bly, I demand that, purfuant to your Agreement with the Senate, you confine your Acculation to " the fingle Article of Tyranny, and bring Proofs and Witnesses of this Crime. For, added the " Conful, as to what he has faid in our Assemblies, besides that you have no Right to take Cognizance of any thing of that nature, the Senate has discharged him of it. And as a Proof of what he faid, he read aloud a Senatusconfultum relating to it: He then came down from the Rostrum; and this was all the Affiftance that the illustrious Criminal received from the timorous Policy of the Senate.

Sicinius speaks ariolanus.

Sicinius then arose, and represented to the People, That CORIOLANUS, a Descendant from the Kings gainst Co- of Rome, had long fought to make himself the Tyrant of his Country. That his Birth, his Courage, those numerous Adherents who might be called his first Subjects, made him but too suspicious. That they cou'd not be too fearful, that the Valour fo much cried up by the Patricians wou'd be pernicious to his Fellow-citizens. That he was too guilty the moment he had rendered himself suspected and formidable. That in matter of Government, the bare Appearance of affecting the Tyranny was a Crime worthy of Death, or at least of Banishment. Sicinius wou'd not explain himself more openly, before he had heard CORIOLANUS'S Defence, to the intent, that in his Reply he might play the whole Strength of his Accusation against the Parts most weakly defended: An Artifice which he had concerted with Decius, who was to speak in his turn to this Affair.

Coriolabis own Caufe.

CORIOLANUS then presented himself in the Assemnus pleads bly with a Courage deserving a better Fortune, and answered the Suspicions which the Tribune had endeavoured to throw fo maliciously upon his Conduct. with a bare Recital of his Services. He began with his first Campaigns, he gave an account of all the Engagements in which he had fought, the Wounds he had received, the military Honours which his Generals had bestowed upon him, and lastly, the feveral feveral Posts in the Army thro' which he had gradually passed. He exposed to the view of the whole People a great number of different Crowns, which he had received either for mounting the Breach first in Affaults, or for having first broke into the Enemy's Camp; or lastly, for having in various Battels faved the Lives of a great Number of Citizens. He called them aloud, each by his Name, and cited them as Witnesses of what he advanced. Those Men, who were mostly Plebeians, immediately arose and gave public Testimony of the Obligations they lay under to him, "We have frequently, cried " they, beheld him fingly break thro' the closest Battalions of the Enemy to fave a Citizen oppress'd with Numbers. It is by him alone we live, and that we now fee ourselves in our own Country. and in the Embraces of our Families. Our Gra-"titude is urged against him as a Crime; that great " Man, and that excellent Citizen is accused of evil Defigns, because they whose Lives he has faved attend him in his Train like his Clients. Can we do otherwise without the most detestable Base-" ness? Can our Interests ever be divided from his? " If you only defire a Fine, we offer all we have in " the World: If you condemn him to Exile, we banish ourselves with him: And if the obstinate " Fury of his Enemies wou'd have his Life, let them take ours rather. They are his, by the inftest of Titles: We shall only restore him what every one of us owes wholly to his Valour, and we shall fave to the Republic a most valuable « Citizen.

Those generous Plebeians in pronouncing these Words shed Floods of Tears, stretched out their Hands to the Assembly after the manner of Supplicants, and endeavoured to work upon the Multitude. Then Coriolanus, tearing away his Robe, shewing his Breast all covered with the Scars of a great number of Wounds which he had received:

"It was to save these worthy Men, says he, it was

1

" to rescue these good Citizens out of the Hands of our Enemies, that I have a thousand times ven-" tured my Life. Let the Tribunes, if they can, " fhew how fuch Actions can ftand with the treacherous Designs which they lay to my Charge. it probable, that an Enemy of the People wou'd expose himself to so many Dangers in War to save " those very Men whom he is accused of endeavour-

" ing to destroy in Peace?

This Dicourse, supported by a noble Air, and that Confidence which flows from Innocence and Truth, made the People ashamed of their Malices The best Men of that Order cried out, that they ought to acquit fo good a Citizen. But the Tribune Decius, alarm'd at this Change, rifing up, as he had agreed with his Colleague Sicinius, "Tho Decius's Speech ariolanus.

" the Senate does not allow us, fays he, to prove gainst Co- " the ill Designs of this Enemy of the People, by " the odious Words which he spoke in full Senate, we shall not want other Proofs no less effential. I will only mention some Actions where that Spirit of Tyranny and Pride are no less apparent. "You know that according to our Laws; the Spoils of the Enemy belong to the Roman People; that

" neither the Soldiers, nor their General himself, has Power to dispose of them; but that all ought to be fold, and the Price arising from them carried by a Quæstor into the publicTreasury; such is the Usage and Constitution of our Government.

"Nevertheless, contrary to these Laws, which are as ancient as Rome itself, Coriolanus having got a confiderable Booty in the Territories of the

" Antiates, divided it among his Friends by his or private Authority; and this Tyrant gave them the People's Due, as the first Fruits of their Con" spiracy. He must therefore either deny a noto-" rious Fact, and fay, that he did not dispose of this Booty, or else maintain that he had Power to do it without violating the Laws. So that " without sheltering himself under these vain Exclamations of his Adherents, or all those Scars which

" mations

" he shews with so much Ostentation, I call upon

" him to answer to this one Article which I urge a" gainst him.

r

It is true, CORIOLANUS had made this Distribution of the Plunder, or rather had fuffered his Soldiers to take each his Share. But he was fo far from disposing of it only in favour of his Friends and Creatures, as was objected to him, that it is certain, his Soldiers, who made Part of that very People which now profecuted him with fo much Violence, received the whole Benefit of that Pillage. To explain this Fact, it is necessary to be informed that the Antiates taking Advantage of the Famine with which Rome was afflicted, and of the Discord which raged between the People and the Senate, had made Incursions up to the very Gates of the City, and yet the People cou'd not be prevailed upon to march out to drive back the Enemy. Coriolanus could not bear this Infult: He ask'd leave of the Confuls to take Arms. He put himself at the head of his Friends, and to induce the Plebeian Soldiers to follow him in this Expedition, he promifed to bring them home laden with Booty. The Soldiers, who were well acquainted with his Valour and Experience in War, and who besides found themselves sharply prest by Hunger, crowded to his Standard. CORIOLANUS, follow'd by the bravest Plebeians, marched out of Rome, surprised the Enemies scattered all over the Country, beat them in feveral Engagements, drove them quite into their own Territories, and at last forced them to shut themselves up in Antium. He then used Reprisals, and while he held the Gates of that City as it were fealed up by the Fear of his Arms, and the Terror of his Name, his Soldiers in their turn ravaged their Territory, cut down their Corn, and gathered in their Harvest Sword in hand. That General gave his Confent to their keeping this Grain, only to help them to fupport their Wives and Children, and by their example

Coriola-

to incite the rest of the Plebeians to seek Provisions boldly in the Country of their Enemies.

But those of the People who had not had any hand in this Expedition, cou'd not without a secret Jealousy behold Coriolanus's Soldiers return into Rome laden with Corn. Decius, who had discovered these Sentiments in them, resolved to improve them to his own Ends, and doubted not but those Plebeians, envious of the good Fortune of their Neighbours, wou'd readily condemn Coriolanus for a generous Action by which they themselves had received no Benefit.

That Tribune, who was urgent and audacious, infolently asked CORIOLANUS whether he was King of Rome, and by what Authority he had disposed of what belonged to the Republic. CORIOLANUS, furprised at an Accusation against which he had prepared no Defence, contented himfelf with giving a bare Relation of the Matter of Fact, as we have stated it. He represented that one part of the People had received the Advantage of the Spoils of the Enemy, and called with a loud Voice the Centurions and chief of the Plebeians that went with him in that Incursion, to bear Testimony to the Truth. those who had not been Sharers in the Corn of the Antiates, being more numerous than Coriolanus's Soldiers, made fo much Noise, that those Captains The Tribunes, finding the cou'd not be heard. People were blown up again to their former Animofity, laid hold of this Opportunity to collect the Suffrages; and CORIOLANUS was at length condemned to perpetual Banishment. nus condemned by Most of the Nobles and Patricians thought themthe People. felves in a manner Banished with this great Man, 7. Plut. in who had always been the Defender and Support of their Order. At first they were under a general Coriol. Liv. Dec. Consternation; but Indignation and Rage quickly 1. 1. 2. fucceeded. Some reproached Valerius, that he had Year of mis-led the Senate by his artful Discourses; others Rome. reproached themselves for their Excess of Conde-262.1

fcenfion

fcention to the People; all repented that they had not rather endured the last Extremities, than have abandoned so illustrious a Citizen to the Insolence of a seditious Rabble.

CORIOLANUS, alone unconcerned in appearance at his Difgrace, left the Affembly with the fame Tranquility as if he had been acquitted. He went first to his House, where he found his Mother, named Veturia, and Volumnia his Wife all drowned in Tears, and in the first Transports of their Grief. He exhorted them in few Words to bear this reverse of Fortune with Constancy; and after having recommended to them the Care of his Children, which were yet but Infants, he strait left his House and Rome, fingle, and without permitting any of his Friends to accompany him, or any of his Servants or Slaves to attend him. Some Patricians and fome young Senators only went with him to the Gates of the City; but without speaking one Word to them, or uttering the least Complaint, he parted from them, neither thanking them for what was past, nor intreating them about the future,

Never did the People testify more Joy, no not even upon vanquishing the greatest Enemies of Rome, than they shewed for the Advantage they had now gained over the Senate and the Body of the Nobility. The Form of the Government received an abfolute Change by the Condemnation and Exile of CORIOLANUS; and the People, who before were dependant upon the Patricians, were now become their Judges, and had got themselves a Right to decide the Fate of the Greatest in the Commonwealth.

1

And indeed the Sovereign Authority was now D. H. 1.7. passed from the Senate into the Assembly of the People, or, to speak more truly, into the Hands of their Tribunes, who, under pretence of defending the The Tri-Concerns of private Persons, made themselves the bunes pro-Arbiters of the Government. The Confuls alone, cure Conthole supreme Heads of the Republic, were the on-ted to their ly Persons they stood in awe of. It was to weaken Interest.

their Power and Credit, that they endeavoured to keep that Dignity from falling to any, but Patricians devoted to their Interests, or so little esteemed as to give them no Cause to be apprehensive of any thing they cou'd do. And to prepare the Multitude to give their Votes conformable to their private Views, they with great Cunning infinuated in all Affemblies, that the best Captains were not the most fit to govern a Commonwealth. That Men of their exalted Courage, being always used to an absolute Power in the Armies, brought home with their Victories a Spirit of Pride, ever dangerous in a Free State. That in the Fatal Obligation the People lay under, to chuse their Confuls only out of the Body of the Patricians, it was of great Importance to them to pick out Men of but moderate Talents, capable of Business, but without too great an Elevation and Superiority.

The People, who now only acted according to the Impression they received from their Magistrates, refused their Voices to the greatest Men in the Republic, in the Comitia held in the Consulate of Q. Sulpitius and Sp. Largius for the Election of their Successors. The Senators and Patricians were formerly used to dispose as they pleased of that great Dignity, because none cou'd be Elected, but in an Assembly by Centuries, wherein the Nobility had the Majority of Voices. But now the People outnumber'd the Patricians by the artful management of the Tribunes, who found ways to gain some and in-D. H.1.8. timidate others. C. Julius and P. Pinarius Ru-rus were proclaimed Confuls: They were but indifferent Soldiers, had no Credit in the Senate, and wou'd never have attained that Dignity if they had deserved it.

Year of Rome 264.

We may observe upon this Occasion, that the Senate and the People, always opposite in their Opinions, both acted contrary to their real Interests, and seemed to aim at joyning two Things incompatible. All the Romans, as well Patricians as Plebeians, as pired to the Conquest of Italy; the Command of the Armies was referved to the Patricians only, who were in Possession of the Dignities of the State; they had no Soldiers but the Plebeians, whom they wou'd reduce to that timid Submission and that servile Dependance, which they cou'd fcarce have expected in mean Artificers, and a Populace bred up and educa-The People, on the contrary, ted in Obscurity. powerful, numerous, and full of that Ruggedness growing from a continual Exercise of Arms, in order to lessen the Authority of the Government, desired no Confuls and Generals, but what wou'd be indulgent, meek, complacent to the Multitude, and fuch as wou'd behave themselves towards their Soldiers, rather with the modest Manners of Equality, than with that lofty and imperious Air which the Command of Armies naturally gives a General. In order to put an end to the Misunderstanding which was between those two Orders of the Republic, either they ought both of them joyntly to have resolved to content themselves peaceably with the narrow Limits of their little State, without undertaking to make Conquests; or the Patricians, if they were desirous of fubduing their Neighbours, shou'd have allowed a greater Share in the Government to a warlike People, Citizens during Winter, but Soldiers all the Summer; and the People, on their Side, shou'd have named to the Command none but the best Generals in the Republic.

the

t

0

e

ıt

n

t-

of

n-

U-

f-

nd

ad

ie-

oi-

nd

le.

ns, of

he

I owe this Reflection to the Events that follow; and we shall see that it was not long before the People repented their having intrusted the Government of the State, and the Command of the Armies, to two Men equally incapable of those Functions.

CORIOLANUS, wandering about after his Depar-Retreat of ture from Rome, did not so much look out for an Coriola-Asylum or Retreat, as for Means and Opportunities nus. of avenging his Wrongs. That exalted Spirit, that Roman so immovable in Appearance, being now wholly given over to himself, cou'd not resist the secret Motions of his Resentment; and in the Designs which which he laid for the Destruction of his Enemies, he was not ashamed to involve the Ruin of his Country it self. He spent the first Days of his Banishment at a Country Seat. His Mind, tost about by violent Passions, formed successively different Schemes. At length, after having cast his Eyes upon the several Nations, that were Neighbours and Enemies to Rome, Sabins, Æqui, Tuscans, Volsci, and Hernici, he found none that seemed more inveterate against the Romans, and at the same time more in a Condition to enter into a War, than the Volsci, the Inhabitants of the Ancient Latium.

Who the Volici

They were a Republic, or a Community confifting of feveral little Towns united by a League, and governed by an Assembly of Deputies from each Canton. This Nation bordering upon Rome, and jealous of her rifing Greatness, had always opposed it with remarkable Courage; but the War had not been fo fuccessful to them as they expected. Romans had taken from them feveral small Boroughs, and part of their Territory; so that in the last War, the Volsci, after having been beaten in several Engagements, were at length reduced to a Necessity of fuing for a Truce for two Years, in order to get time to repair their broken Strength: But this did not leffen the Animosity which burnt in their Hearts; they fought all over Italy to ftir up new Enemies against the Romans, and upon their Resentment it was that CORIOLANUS built his hopes of engaging them to take up Arms again. But he was the most unfit Man in the World to perfuade them to fuch a Defign; he alone had done them more Mischief than all the rest of the Romans; more than once he had cut to Pieces their Troops, ravaged their Country, taken and plunder'd their Towns: the Name of CORIOLANUS was as odious as it was formidable throughout the whole Community of the Volsci.

Besides, that little Republic was then governed by Tullus Attius, the General of that Nation, jealous of the Glory of Coriolanus, who had beat him

him in all the Occasions wherever they had fought against each other; a Disgrace which Men would gladly hide even from themselves, but which they never forgive. Nothing could be more dangerous than to put himself into the Hands of an Enemy, who, to essay the Shame of his Deseats, might per-Livy. 1. 2. suade his Citizens to destroy him. All these Reasons Plut. in offered themselves to the Mind of Coriolanus; Coriolabut immoderate Thirst of Vengeance prevailed in a 1. 8. Val. Heart incapable of Fear, and he came to a Resolu-Max. 1. 5. tion to apply directly to Tullus himself.

He departed from his Retreat in Disguise; and in the Evening entered Antium, the chief City of the of Corio-Community of the Volsci. He went directly to Tul-lanus with Lus's House, with his Face covered: He sate him the Genedown, without speaking one Word, by the Domestic ral of the Hearth, a Place sacred in all the Houses of ancient Volsci. Paganism. A Behaviour so extraordinary, and a certain Air of Authority that never abandons great Men, surprised the Servants; they ran to tell their Master. Tullus came, and demanded of him who he was, and what he required of him.

CORIOLANUS then discovering himself: "If thou dost not yet know me, says he, I am CAIUS MARCIUS, my Surname is CORIOLANUS, the only Reward lest me of all my Services. I am banished from Rome by the Hatred of the People, and the Pusilanimity of the Great: I seek Revenge; it lies in thy Power to employ my Sword against my Foes and thy Country's. If thy Republic will not accept of my Service, I give my Life into thy Hands; put an end to an old Enemy, that may

"else come to do more Mischiess to thy Country.

Tullus, amazed at the Greatness of his Soul, gave him his Hand: "Fear nothing, Marcius,
"fays he; thy Considence is the Pledge of thy Security. By bringing us thyself, thou givest us more than ever thou tookest from us. And accordingly we shall take care to acknowledge thy Services better than thy Fellow-citizens. So great

L 3 "a Captain

" a Captain may justly expect the greatest Honours " from the Volsci. He then led him into his Apartment, where they privately conferred about the Means of renewing the War. We have already faid, that there was at this time

Book If.

Tullus's Policy in Volsci to take Arms.

a Truce between the Volsci and the Romans; the Bugetting the finess was to bring the former to a Resolution of breaking it. But this was not without its Difficulties, because of the late Losses and Defeats which the Volsci had fuffered in the last War. Tullus, in Concert with CORIOLANUS, fought a Pretence to stir up their old Animofity. The Romans were preparing to reprefent fome public Sports, which were part of the Religion of those times; the People about Rome flocked to them from all Parts, and there went particularly a great Number of the Volsci. They were dispersed in divers Parts of the City; nay, there were feveral that not being able to find Hofts to receive them lay under Tents in the Public Places. This great multitude of Strangers gave Uneafiness to the Confuls; and to add to it, TULLUS caused a false Alarm to be given, that the Volsci were to set Fire to several parts of Rome. The Confuls made their Report of this to the Senate; and as they were well acquainted with the Inveteracy of that Nation, the Magistrates caused an Order to be published throughout the City. enjoyning all the Volsci to depart from it before Night, and even prescribing the Gate thro' which they should pass. This Order was executed strictly, and all of that Nation were instantly driven out of Rome. They carried with them each into his Canton the Shame of this ill Usage, and a strong desire of Revenge. Tul-Lus met them in the way as by Chance; and after having heard the unworthy manner in which they had been fent out of Rome; "Is it possible (fays he, " on purpose to increase their resentment,) they cou'd drive you from a Publick Festival, and as it were " from an Affembly of Gods and Men, like the " Profanest Wretches and Outlaws? Can you, after fuch vile Treatment, try to conceal from yourselves

"the irreconcileable Aversion which the Romans bear you? Will you wait, till, spite of the Truce

" which has made us lay down our Arms, they come and furprize you, and lay wafte your Territories

" once again?

An Assembly of the States was held tumultuously; the more violent fort were for taking Arms immediately, and for carrying Fire and Sword into the Territory of Rome, in revenge for the Insult they had received. But Tullus, who directed this Affair, advised them, before they broke out, to send for Coriolanus into their Assembly: "The Captain, "fays he, whose Valour we have so often felt, now more an Enemy to the Romans than the Volsci, seems to have been brought hither by the Gods to restore our Affairs; and he will give us no Counsels, whereof he will not share the Dangers of the "Execution.

The Roman was called, and introduced into the Affembly: He appear'd with a Countenance fad, but resolute at the same time; all present fixed their Eyes attentively upon a Man that had been more dreadful to them, than all the rest of the Romans put together; and they listned to his Words with that Respect, which is always paid to Merit under Persecution.

" None of you can be ignorant, fays he to them, Coriolathat I am condemned to perpetual Banishment, nus's Speech

" through the Malice or Weakness of those who are to the Vol-

" the Authors or Accomplices of my Difgrace. It

"I had fought only a Place of Refuge, I might have retired either among the Latins our Allies, or to fome Roman Colony. But a Life fo obscure had been to me insupportable, and I always thought it was better for a Man to throw it up, than to fee

" himself reduced to such a Condition, as to be able neither to serve his Friends, nor be revenged up" on his Enemies. This is my Temper: I would

" deserve by my Sword the Asylum I ask of you:

"Let us joyn our common Refentments. You

L. 4 "know

" know full well that those ungrateful Citizens, who " have banished me so unjustly, are your most inveterate Foes: Rome, that Haughty City, threatens vou with her Chains. It is your Interest to weaken fuch formidable Neighbours: I find, with plea-" fure, that you are disposed to renew the War, and I confess it is the only way to stop the Progress of " that ambitious Nation. But in order to render this War successful, it is necessary that it shou'd be just in the sight of the Gods, or at least appear 66 fo before Men; it is necessary that the Motive or Pretence upon which you shall take up Arms, be " fuch as may engage your Neighbours, and procure you new Allies. Feign that it is your Defire to convert the Truce which is between the two "Nations into a folid Peace: Let the Ambassadors that you fend to Rome upon this Account, demand only this one Condition, namely, a Restitution of " the Lands which have been taken from you, either by the chance of War, or in compulsive Treaties. "You are not to be informed that the Territory of « Rome, at the Foundation of that City, was at " most but of five or six Miles Extent. "Canton is infenfibly become a great Country by "the Conquests, or to speak more truly, by the U-" furpations of the Romans. Volsci, Sabines, Æqui, " Albans, Tuscans, Latins, in a word, there is not " a Nation in their Neighbourhood from which they " have not wrested some of her Towns, and part " of her Territory. These are so many Allies that " will join with you in an Affair which is common " to you all, and concerns each of you alike. " If the Romans, intimidated by the Terror of " your Arms, confent to restore to you the Cities, the Towns, and the Lands which they have ftrip-

" that they have loft: which will at one stroke re-" duce that proud Nation to the same state of Weak-" ness in which it was in its Origin. Or if she unee ped you of, then, after your Example, the other " Nations of Italy will demand each the Domain

" dertakes, dertakes, as I doubt not she will, to hold those Usurpations by force of Arms, then in a War so equitable you will have both Gods and Men your Friends. Your Allies will tye themselves more closely to you; there will be formed a powerful League, capable of destroying, or at least of humbling so haughty a Republic. I will not mention the little Capacity I have gained in War:

Soldier or Captain, in whatever Rank you place

" me, I will gladly facrifice my Life to revenge

" you of our common Enemies.

This Discourse was heard with pleasure, as are all those that engage and flatter our Passions. War was resolved on; the Community of the Volsci intrusted the Conduct of it to Tullus and Coriolanus; and to bind the Roman more strictly to the Volscian Nation, they conferred on him the Quality of Senator. At the same time, according to his Advice, they dispatched Ambassadors to Rome; where they were no sooner arrived, but they represented to the Senate that their Superiors, after the Example of the Latins, aspired to the Honour of being Allies of the Roman People; but in order to make this Union everlasting, "We demand, said those Ambassadors, "that the Republic restore to us the Towns and Lands which we have lost by the chance of War.

"This will be the furest Pledge of a solid and lasting Peace; otherwise we cannot avoid taking Pos-

" fession of them again by force of Arms.

The Ambassadors being retired, the Senate did not spend much time in deliberation: It was unknown to Rome what it was to yield to Menaces; and it was a Fundamental Maxim of their Government, not to submit to an Enemy, even the Victorious; so that the Ambassadors were soon called in again. The first Consul replied in sew words, that Senate's Fear wou'd never make the Romans give up what Answer to they had conquered by their Valour; and that if the Volscian Volsci took Arms the first, the Romans would lay dors. them down the last; with this they were dismiss'd.

The

War declared.

The Return of these Ambassadors was follow'd by a Declaration of War. TULLUS and CORIOLANUS, who forefaw the Senate's Answer, held their Troops in readiness to enter upon Action. Tullus, with a Body of Referve, staid in the Country to defend the Entrance of it against the Enemy, while CORIOLA-

The Conlanus.

Nus at the head of the main Army threw himself inquests made to the Territory of the Romans and their Allies, be-6 Corio- fore the Confuls had taken any measures for resisting According to Livy, he first drove from Circœum a Colony of Romans that were established there; but Dionysius Halicarnasseus says, that the Inhabitants, intimidated by the Approach of the Enemy, opened their Gates, and that CORIOLANUS only obliged them to furnish him with Provisions and Cloaths for his Soldiers. He then took from the the Romans, Satricum, Longulum, Polusca, and Corioli, which they had won but a little before from the Volsci; he also made himself Master of Corbio, Vitellium, Trebia, Labicum, and Pedum; Bola, for making Resistance, was carried Sword in hand, and the Inhabitants given up to the Fury of an Enemy victorious and enraged. Coriolanus's Soldiers, disperfing about the Country, carried Fire and Sword in all Parts. But in this general Plunder and Burning, they had private Orders to spare the Houses and Estates of the Patricians. CORIOLANUS affected so remarkable a distinction, either out of his former Love for those of his own Order; or, which is more probable, to render the Senate Suspicious to the People, and to increase the Dissentions which were between them.

Di/may and Con-Rernation among the Romans.

This Conduct had all the Effect which he expect-The People failed not to accuse the Seed from it. nate publickly of having an Understanding with Co-RIOLANUS, and of getting him to come at the Head of an Army, on purpose to abolish the Tribunitian Power. The Patricians on their fide upbraided the People, that they had drove fo great a Captain to throw himfalf in despair into the Party of the Enemy. Suspicion, Suspicion, Distrust, Hatred, reigned in both Parties; and in this Disorder they thought less of repulsing the Volsci, than of decrying and ruining the Domestic Foe. The two Consuls, hid behind the Walls of Rome, made Levies but slowly. Spurius, Nautius, and Sextus Furius, who succeeded them, did not shew more Courage and Resolution. It was visible they were afraid to venture themselves against so great a General. The People themselves, and their Tribunes, who were so sierce in the public Forum, were in no haste to give their Names to be inrolled; none cared for stirring out of Rome, whether they had no great Opinion of the Capacity of their Leaders, or because they found themselves deserted by their Allies who had changed sides with Fortune.

Oppose his Designs, advances still on, takes Lavinium, vested. and at length comes and encamps at the Cluilian

Trenches, five Miles distance from Rome.

Upon the Fame of this great run of Success, most of the Volsci flock to Coriolanus's Army. The very Soldiers of Tullus himself, drawn by the hopes of the Sack and Plunder of Rome, leave their General, and declare they acknowledge no other but the Roman: This was in a manner a fresh Victory which CORIOLANUS gained over Tullus, and which left a sharp Resentment in that Volscian's Breast. Eyes of all Italy were turned upon the Romans and the Volsci, who only by the Change of their Generals had felt fo great a one in their Fortune; So true it is, that the Strength of a State confifts not fo much in the Number and Bravery of its Troops, as in the Experience of him who commands them. The Confternation was general at Rome. The People, who from the top of the Walls behold the Enemies spread all over the Country, with loud Cries demand Peace. They fay openly in the Forum, that they shou'd annul the Sentence of Condemnation which had past upon CORIOLANUS, and recall him from his Exile: In a word, that very People which had but lately banished banished him with so much Fury, now call for his Return with equal Violence.

Most of the Patricians opposed it, either to remove the Suspicion of their having kept up the least Intelligence with him, or only out of that Spirit of Generosity so common among the Romans, which made them never more averse to Peace than upon ill Success. There then issued from the Senate that resolute and haughty Answer, but which they maintained but indifferently afterwards, That the Romans wou'd never grant any thing to a Rebel, so long as he remained in Arms.

CORIOLANUS, acquainted and enraged with this Reply, breaks up his Camp, marches directly to Rome, and invests the Place as if he meant to besiege it. A Design so daring throws both the Patricians and the People into an equal Consternation; all their Hearts and Resolutions sail them; Hatred gives way to Fear. The Senate and People now jointly concur M. Minu- to sue for Peace: They send Deputies to Coriolacius Post- nus, nay and chuse out for this Negotiation sive Men Minius, C. of Consular Dignity, and such of the Senate as had sp. Larmost firmly adhered to his Interests.

gius, P. The Volsci made these Deputies pass thro' two Pinarius, Ranks of Soldiers standing to their Arms, and Co-RIOLANUS surrounded by his chief Officers received them seated in his Tribunal, with the State of an from the Enemy that was resolved to prescribe the Law.

The Romans exhorted him in modest and pathetic Terms to give Peace to the two Nations; and conjured him not to push the Advantages which his Arms had given the Volsci, so far as to forget the Welfare of his Country. But they received only this severe Answer; That they might obtain a Treaty, if they restored to the Volsci the Country which they had taken from them; if they gave that Nation the same Right of Citizens which they had granted to the Latins, and if they recalled the Roman Colonies from the Towns which they had got possession of unjustly. Coriolanus having used this haughty

M. Minucius Post-humus, C. Minius, Sp. Largius, P. Pinarius, Q. Sulpicius, Deputies fent from the Senate to Coriolanus.

Coriolanus's Answer.

haughty Strain as to what related to the Concerns of the Public, came to a more gentle Behaviour towards the Deputies. He offered them in particular to do them all the kind Offices that they cou'd justly expect from an old Friend. But the only Favour those generous Romans asked of him, was, That he wou'd withdraw his Troops from the Territory of Rome, while the Senate and People came to a final Determination either for Peace or War. CORIOLA-Nus, for their fakes, granted thirty days Truce, to be observed only with respect to the proper Territory of Rome: He then dismissed the Deputies, who promifed that the Senate shou'd return him a decisive Answer in the thirty Days. He spent that time in taking other Latin Towns, and after that Expedition, appeared once more at the Gates of Rome with his whole Army.

Other Deputies were immediately sent to him, who conjured him to exact nothing but what might be agreeable to the Dignity of the Roman Name; but Coriolanus, naturally stern and inslexible, without any apparent Anger, but also without Pity, coldly replied, that the Romans had no other choice but Restitution or War; that he allowed them only three Days more to come to a Resolution, and that after the Expiration of this further Term, they shou'd not be permitted to come to his Camp again.

The Return of these Envoys augmented the Pub-Rome lic Consternation. Every Body runs to Arms; some besieged. post themselves upon the Ramparts; others stand to the Guard of the Gates, for sear of being betrayed by the private Adherents of Coriolanus; while some fortisty themselves in their very Houses, as if the Enemy had already been Master of the City. In this Consusion there was neither Discipline nor Command. The Consuls, wholly possessed by their Fear, seemed to have renounced the Duties of their Office: The Tribunes were not now so much as heard of. In this universal Terror the common People seemed as it were to receive Orders only from their Apprehengo to Co-

riolanus.

fions: They were no longer the fame haughty and intrepid Romans that they used to be; the Courage of the Nation feemed to be gone over with CORIOLANUS into the Camp of the Volsci. The Senate affembles; Expedient upon Expedient is proposed; no Design is formed becoming the Roman Honour: all determines in fending new Deputies to the Enemy, and to work upon him the more, they refolve to employ

The Priefts, the Sacrificers, the Augurs, and the the Ministers of their Religion.

The Priests Guardians of the facred Things, vested in their cedeputed to remonial Habits, march forth of Rome in a kind of Procession. They enter the Enemy's Camp with a Countenance grave and modest, and such as was likely to strike an Awe upon the Multitude. He that was to speak for all, befeeches Coriolanus by the Respect he owed to the Gods, and by all that was most facred in Religion, to grant Peace to his Country; but they found him equally hard and inexorable. He told them that what they asked lay wholly in the Power of the Romans, who might have Peace, whenever they thought fit to restore the Countries which they usurped from their Neighbours. He added, he was not ignorant that the first Kings of Rome, to ftir up the Ambition of the Romans, and justify their Robberies, had been so politic as to spread abroad, that the Gods decreed the Empire of the World to the City of Rome. That the Senate had taken great Pains to keep up an Opinion which Religion had made reverend; and that the People, prejudiced and infatuated with those Visions, looked upon all Wars to be just and holy, which tended to the Advancement of their Country's Greatness. But that the Neighbours of Rome did not think themselves bound to fubmit themselves to their Yoke, upon the Credit of Revelations fo fuspicious and felf-defigning. That the present State of Affairs sufficiently proved their Falsity; that he must frankly tell them he was fure of carrying the Town very fhortly. That the Romans,

Trans Contract

Romans, to avoid restoring Lands unjustly acquired, ran the hazard of lofing their rightful Dominion; and that for his part, he protested before the Gods that he was innocent of all the Blood that was likely to be fhed thro' their Obstinacy in detaining the Fruit of their Usurpations. Having then shewn some outward Tokens of Respect and Veneration which he thought due to the Sanctity of their Character, he fent them back without abating any thing in the least of his former Demands.

When the People faw them return to Rome without having been able to obtain any Concession, they look'd upon the Republic to be just upon the Brink of Destruction. The Temples were crowded with old Men, Women and Children, who all with Tears in their Eyes, and prostrate before the Altars, implored of the Gods the Preservation of their Country.

Such was the melancholy face of Things in the Ci-Valeria's' ty, when a Roman Lady named Valeria, Sifter of Resolution. Valerius Publicola, moved by a kind of divine Infpiration, came out of the Capitol, accompanied by a great Number of Women of her own Condition. to whom she had communicated her Design, and went strait to the House of Veturia the Mother of CORIOLANUS. They found her with Volumnia, the Wife of that Roman, deploring their own Misfortunes and those of Rome.

Valeria accosted them with a look of Sorrow suitable to the present Condition of the Republic: "We " are Roman Ladies, fays she to them, that have re-" course to Roman Ladies for the Safety of our com-" mon Country. O illustrious Women, do not fuffer Rome to become a Prey to the Volsci, and our Enemies to triumph over our Liberty. Go along with us even to the Camp of CORIOLANUS, to beg of him Peace for his Fellow-citizens: All our " hope is in the remarkable Veneration, and the ten-" der Love he always had for fo good a Mother, and fo virtuous a Wife. Implore, conjure, demand. So good a Man can never withstand your " Tears.

Tears. We will all follow you with our Children: We will throw ourselves at his Feet, and who knows but the Gods, moved by our honest Sorrow, may preserve a City whose Defence seems wholly abandon'd by Men?

Veturia's The Tears which Valeria shed in abundance inter-Answer to rupted this affectionate Discourse, which Veturia an-Valeria. Swered with equal Sadness: "You apply, Valeria, to a " very weak Expedient, when you address yourselves to two Women buried beneath a Load of Affliction. Since that unfortunate Day when the People, in their Fury, so unjustly banished CORIOLANUS, we have never seen anything of that filial Respect, and that tender Affection which he till then had always shewn for his Mother, and for a Wife ever

dear to him. When he returned from the Affembly where he had been condemned, he look'd up-

" for fome time in a gloomy Silence, 'Tis done,

" fays he to us, Coriolanus is condemned; our

" ungrateful Citizens have banished me for ever from the Bosom of my Country. Support this Blow of Fortune with a Courage worthy of two Roman

Women. I recommend my Children to your care;

Farewel; I now depart, and leave without regret

" a City where all Men of Virtue are hated and per-

"fecuted: With these words he broke away. We began to follow him; I held his eldest Son by the Hand, and Volumnia, all drowned in Tears, carried the youngest in her Arms. Then turning to us;

" Come no further, fays he, and give over your vain

" Complaints. You have now no Son, my Mother; and thou, Volumnia, the best of Women, thy Husband is for ever lost to thee. May the Gods grant that thou mayest quickly find another, worthy of thy Virtue, and more fortunate than

" CORIOLANUS! His Wife, at these cruel and in-

" human Words, fwoons away with Grief, and

" while I run to her Affistance, he leaves us abrupt-

" ly with the Hard-heartedness of a Barbarian, without fo much as receiving our last Embraces, and without giving us, in so intolerable an Affliction, the flightest Proof of Compassion for our Misery. " He departs from Rome, alone, without Servants. " without Money, and without even telling us to what part of the World he wou'd direct his Steps. Ever since he left us he has never in the least enquired after his Family, nor given us any account of his Welfare; fo that it feems as if in the general Hatred which he shews to his Country, his Mother and his Wife were his greatest Enemies. "What Success then can you expect from our Intreaties to a Man so implacable? Can two Wo-" men bend that stubborn Heart, which the Mini-" fters of Religion themselves could not soften? " And indeed what shall I say to him? What can " I reasonably defire of him? That he wou'd pardon ungrateful Citizens, who have treated him like " a Man blackened with the foulest Crimes? That he " would take Compassion upon a violent Populace which had none for his Innocence? And that he " wou'd betray a Nation, which has not only opened him an Asylum, but has even preferred him to her most illustrious Citizens in the Command of her Armies? With what Brow can I prefume to " alk him to abandon fuch generous Protectors, in order to deliver himself again into the Hands of " his most bitter Enemies? Can a Roman Mother, and a Roman Wife, with Decency exact from a "Son and a Husband things which must dishonour him before both Gods and Men? Mournful Cir-" cumftance, in which we have not Power to hate the most formidable Enemy of our Country! Give us up therefore to our unhappy Destiny; leave us buried in our just Afflictions.

Valeria and the other Ladies that accompanied her, The Senate made no Answer but with their Tears. Some em-fends a Debrace her Knees; others beseech Volumnia to join her putation of Prayers to theirs; all conjure Veturia not to refuse Coriolaher Country this last Assistance. The Mother of nus.

CORIOLANUS,

CORIOLANUS, overcome by Intreaties fo urgent, promises to take this new Deputation upon her, if the Senate agrees to it. Valeria gave advice of it to the Confuls, who made the Proposal of it in full Senate. The Affair was long debated: Some opposed it, fearing left CORIOLANUS shou'd detain all those Ladies, who were of the chief Families in Rome, and by that means force them to open their Gates without fo much as drawing his Sword. Some were even for fecuring his Mother, his Wife and his Children, as fo many Hostages that might bring him to a better Temper: But the Majority approved this Deputation, faying, that the Gods, who had inspired Valeria with this pious Defign, wou'd give it Success; and that no Treachery was to be apprehended from a Man of the Character of CORIOLANUS, fierce indeed, fevere and inflexible, but not capable of violating the Law of Nations.

This Advice carried it, and next Day all the most illustrious of the Roman Ladies repaired to Veturia's House. There they presently mounted a number of Chariots which the Confuls had ordered to be made ready for them, and without any Guard took the way to the Enemy's Camp.

CORIOLANUS perceiving from a far that long train of Coaches and Chariots, fent out Persons to see what it shou'd mean: Word was quickly brought him that it was his Mother, his Wife, and a great number of other Women coming to the Camp. He was at first furprized that Roman Ladies, bred up in that auftere Retirement which was fuch an Honour to them. shou'd prevail upon themselves to come unguarded into an Army of Foes, among Soldiers, who are commonly licentious and unruly. He judged what Views the Romans had in fo unheard of a Deputation: He conceived that this was the last Expedient the Senate cou'd think of to work upon him. He determined to receive them with the same Respect that he had paid to the Ministers of Religion; that is, to give those venerable Women all the Observance which was due due to them, but in the main to grant them none of their Requests. But he reckoned upon a savage Refoluteness which was not in his Nature; and he no fooner beheld his Mother and Wife at the Head of this Troop of Roman Ladies, but struck and moved with the fight of Persons so dear to him, he ran haflily to embrace them. At first they expressed their Joy upon feeing each other again only by their Tears; but after they had given sometime to these first workings of Nature, Veturia beginning to enter upon the Subject for which she came: CortoLanus, that he might not make himself suspicious to the Volsci, called the principal Officers of his Army to be Witneffes of what passed in this Interview. They were no fooner come, but Veturia, to engage her Son to have the more regard to the Request she came to make told him, That all those Roman Ladies, whom he knew, and who were of the best Families in Rome, had omitted nothing, during his Absence, that might give Comfort to her and Volumnia his Wife. That touched with the Calamities of the War, and apprehending the fatal Confequences of the Siege of Rome, they were come to beg Peace at his Hands once more: She conjured him in the Name of the Gods to grant it to his Country, and to turn the Power of his Arms on other Foes.

Corrotants replyed, that he shou'd offend those very Gods, whom he had called to be Witnesses of the Faith he had given the Volsci, if he had granted her so unjust a Demand. That he cou'd not think of betraying the Interests of those who had not only given him an honourable Rank in their Senate, but had also trusted him with the Command of their Army. That he had sound at Antium more Honours and Wealth than he had lost at Rome by the Ingratitude of his Fellow-Citizens; and that nothing wou'd be wanting to his Happiness, if she wou'd please to be Partner in his Fortune, and come and enjoy among the Volsci the Honours which they wou'd pay to the Mother of their General.

M 2

The

Veturia's

Speech to

nus.

The Volscian Officers, that were present at this Conference, shewed by their Applauses how much they were pleased with this Answer; but Veturia, without entering into a comparison between Rome and Antium, which wou'd probably have offended them, contented her felf with telling her Son, she wou'd never exact any thing of him that might be a Blemish upon his Honour; but that without being any ways deficient in what he owed to the Volsci, he might mediate a Peace, that shou'd be equally advantageous to both Nations. "And can you, my Son, added she, raising her Voice, refuse a "Proposal so equitable, unless you prefer a cruel and obstinate Revenge to your Mother's Tears and Intreaties? Confider that your Reply is to de-" cide the Fate of my Glory, nay and of my Life too. If I carry back with me to Rome the hopes of an approaching Peace; if I return thither with the Assurances of your Reconciliation; with what "Transports of Joy shall I be received by our Fellow-Citizens? Those few Days which the Gods " ordain me yet to pass on Earth, shall be surround-" ed with Glory and with Honours. Nay, my Hap-" piness shall not end with this mortal Life; and if it be true, that there are different Places for our " Souls after Death, I shall not need to have the least " fear of those obscure and gloomy Caverns where " the Wicked are confined: The Elysian Fields, that delicious Abode fet apart for the Virtuous, " will not even fuffice for my Reward. After hav-" ing faved Rome, the City fo dear to Jupiter, I " may prefume to hope for a place in that pure and " fublime Region of the Air, which is supposed to " be inhabited by the Children of the Gods. But I " give myself up too much to these pleasing Views. What will become of me, if thou perfifteft in that implacable Hatred, whose fatal Effects we have " already felt too much? Our Colonies expelled by "thy Arms, from most of the Cities which ac-" knowledged the Empire of Rome; thy unbridled Soldiers

" Soldiers foread thro' the Land, and carrying " Fire and Sword along with them where-ever they " go, ought they not to have affwaged thy Thirst " of Vengeance? And hast thou had the Heart to " lay waste the Country which gave thee Birth, and " nourish'd thee so long? The moment thou sawest " the Towers of Rome from afar, did it not come " into thy Mind, that thy Gods, thy House, thy Mother, thy Wife, and thy Children were in-" clos'd within her Walls? Dost thou believe, that covered with the Shame of a contemptuous Deni-" al, I can patiently wait till thy Arms have pro-" nounced our Doom? A Roman Woman knows how to die, when her Honour calls upon her fo to do; and if I cannot move thee, know I have " resolved to give myself Death in thy Presence. "Thou shalt not march to Rome without treading over the Body of her to whom thou owest thy Being; " and if a fight of fo much horror has not Power " to ftop thy Fury, remember at least, that, by means of thy endeavouring to bring Rome into " Chains, thy Wife and Children cannot avoid a " fpeedy Death, or a tedious Servitude.

CORIOLANUS, tost with the Violence of contending Paffions, flood unable to make Reply: Hatred and defire of Revenge balanced in his Heart the Impression which so moving a Discourse made, in fpite of all his Resolution. Veturia, seeing he was shaken, but being afraid his Rage might prevail above his Pity: " Why dost thou not answer me, my Son, faid the; wilt thou not know thy Mother? Hast thou forgot the Care I took of thy "Infancy? And canft Thou, who makeft War one ly to revenge thy felf of the Ingratitude of thy "Fellow-Citizens, deny me the first Favour I ever " asked thee, without blackening thyfelf with the very " fame Crime? If I required thee to betray the " Volsci, who have given thee so generous a Recep-"tion, thou woud'ft have just Cause to reject such " a Proposal. But Veturia is uncapable of putting M 3 her Son upon any thing Base: Thy Glory is " more dear to me, even than my own Life. I " only defire thee to withdraw thy Troops from the Walls of Rome: Allow us a Truce for a ". Year, that in this Interval Measures may be taken to procure a folid Peace. Grant this my Son, "I conjure thee by Jupiter, all-Good and all-" Powerful, who prefides at the Capitol; by the " Manes of thy Father and of thy Ancestors. If my Prayers and Tears are not able to move thee behold thy Mother at thy Feet, imploring of thee " the Preservation of her Country:" And with these Words, melting in Tears, she embraces his Knees; his Wife and Children do the fame, and all the Roman Ladies that were with her beg for Mercry by their Cries and Tears.

Answer of CORIOLANUS transported, and as it were besides Coriolanus himself to see Veturia at his Feet, cries out: "Ah! to his Mo-" my Mother, what is it you do?" And tenderly ther.

pressing her Hand in lifting her up: " Rome is fav-" ed, fays he to her, but your Son is loft;" well foreseeing that the Volsci wou'd never forgive him the Regard he was going to pay to her Intreaties. He then took her in private with his Wife, and agreed with them, that he wou'd endeavour to obtain the Confent of the Principal Officers in his Army, for raising the Blockade. That he wou'd use all his Credit and Endeavours to bring the Community of the Volsci to Terms of Accommodation; and that if the former Success had made them obstinate. and he cou'd not prevail, he wou'd lay down his Command, and retire to fome neutral City; that his Friends might then manage the Repeal of his Sentence, and his Return to Rome. He then took his leave of his Wife and Mother, after having tenderly embraced them, and thought of nothing now but how to obtain an honourable Peace for his Country.

He raises there represented the Difficulty of forming the Siege.

of

of a City which had a formidable Army for its Garrifon, and where there were as many Soldiers as there were Inhabitants; and concluded for a Retreat.
No body contradicted his Opinion; tho' after what had passed they cou'd not be ignorant of the Motives of this new Resolution. The Army immediately began its March; and the Volsci, more affected with the filial Respect he had shewn for his Mother, than with their own Interest, retired all to their several Cantons,

But Tullus, the General, who had received him at first with so much Humanity, jealous of the Esteem and Interest he had gained with the Soldiers, laid hold of this Opportunity to destroy him; and he no sooner saw him returned to the City of Antium, but he publicky gave out that this Exile had betrayed the Interests of the Volsci. Coriolanus, in order to clear himself, desired he might answer for his Conduct before the General Council of the Nation; but Tullus, who no less feared his Eloquence than his Valour, raised a Tumult, by Advantage of which his Agents threw themselves upon the Roman and stabbed him; the miserable and almost un-Death of avoidable Fate of all those who are so unhappy as to Coriolatake Arms against their Country.

Such was the End of this Great Man, too Haughty indeed for a Republican, but who by his great Qualities and Services deserved a better Treatment both from the Volsci and the Romans. When his Death was known at Rome, the People shewed neither Joy nor Grief; and perhaps they were not forry that the Volsci had freed them from the Perplexity of recalling a Patrician whom they no longer feared, and still hated,

End of the Second Book.

THE

HISTORY

OFTHE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OFTHE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK III.

Sp. Cassius Viscellinus, a Patrician, conceives Hopes of getting bimself acknowledged King of Rome, by means of the Divisions that reign in the City. bring the People over to his side, he proposes in the Senate to have an Account taken of the conquered Lands, in order to divide them equally among the This is what was called the Agrarian Citizens. Law. Virginius, Cassius's Colleague in the Confulship, and C. Rabuleius, Tribune of the People, join to hinder the execution of the Consul's Proposal. A Decree of the Senate, empowering Q. Fabius and C. Cornelius, Consuls elect, to name Commissioners for the Partition of the Lands. Cassius condemned to die. Menenius, the Son of Agrippa, and Sp. Servilius, are impeached by the Tribunes, for baving in their Consulship opposed the Nomination of those Commissioners.

Commissioners. The first is fined, and shuts himself up in his House, where he starves himself to Death: The second disperses the Danger by his Constancy. Volero. A Law proposed by him for the Assemblies by Tribes. This Law passes in spite of Appius. The Tribunes in Conjunction with the Consuls demand the Execution of the Senate's Decree for the Division of the conquered Lands. Appius prevents this Demand from taking effect. The Death of that Consular gives the Tribunes room to prosecute this Business anew; but without Success.

HIS Aversion in the People to all that bore the Name of Patricians, arose only from the Jealoufy of the Government. But as it had hitherto cost the Senate no more than the Establishment of the Tribunes, and the Banishment of a private Man, the zealous Republicans were not displeased with this Opposition of Interests, which by keeping an even Balance between the Credit of the Great, and the People's Power, served to maintain the Public Liberty. Such was the Difposition of the People's Minds, when an Ambitious Patrician took it in his Head, that by driving the Contention fomewhat further, and making himself the Chief of one of the Parties, he might destroy them both, and upon their Ruins lay the Foundation of his own Advancement,

This Patrician was named Sp. Cassius Viscel-Year of Linus; he had commanded Armies, obtained the Rome Honour of a Triumph, and was then actually the 267. or third time Conful. He was a Man naturally Vain 268. Chanand Ostentatious, always exaggerating his own Ser-Sp. Cassius. vices, despising those of others, and ascribing to himself alone all the Glory in any good Success. Blinded by inordinate Ambition, he had the Presumption to aspire to the Royalty so solemnly proscribed by the Laws; and in the secret Design, which he had long before formed of restoring it in his own Person, he did not hesitate what Party he shou'd

The Methods be

Year of er 268.

D. H. 1.

8. Liv.

9.

Rome

shou'd join in with. He resolved first to gain the Affection of the People, who always give themfelves up implicitely to those who know how to catch them with the specious Bait of promoting their Interest.

His Partiality openly appeared during his fecond Consulate, at the Time when the Establishment of the Tribunes was in dispute. It is true, his politic Condescensions might be attributed to his Desire of feeing the People re-united to the Senate; but his sook to win late suspicious Conduct with relation both to the on the Peo-Hernici, and the Roman People, entirely convinced the Senate that his Views and Interests were different from those of the Republic.

The Hernici, or Hernicians, were one of those

petty Nations neighbouring upon Rome, who as we have already faid, inhabited part of Latium. After the Death of CORIOLANUS, they entered into a League with the Volsci against the Romans. Aqui-266, 267, lius, who was then Conful with T. Sicinius, had defeated them, Cassius, who fucceeded him in the Confulship, and in the Conduct of that War, reduced them by the mere Terror of his Arms to fue for Peace; they applied to the Senate, which referr-Dec. 1. 1.ed the Affair to the Conful. Cassius taking advantage of the Power given him by this Commiffion, without fo much as making the Senate acquainted with the Articles of the Treaty, granted Peace to the Hernici, and left them the third part of their Territory. By the fame Treaty he gave them the defired Title of Allies and Citizens of Rome; so that he treated the Vanguished as favourably as if they had been Victorious. In order to make himself Friends both within and without the State, he fet apart for the Latins one half of what remained of the Lands of the Hernici, and the other half he divided among the poor Plebeians of Rome. He even endeavoured to recover out of the Hands of fome private Persons Parcels of Lands which he faid belonged to the Public, and which he intended to have distributed also among the poorer Citizens. He had before demanded the Honour of the Tri-Liv. Dec. umph, with as much Considence as if he had gain-1.1.2. ed some glorious Victory; and obtained by his Credit a Reward which used never to be granted but to Generals who had sought some important Battel with great Success, and had left at least five thousand of the Enemy dead upon the spot.

The next Day after his Triumph, according to custom, he gave an Account, in an Assembly of the People, of all that he had done for the Glory and Service of the Republic, during the last Campaign. As his Exploits that Year afforded him nothing fufficiently shining, he ran chiefly upon his former Services. He represented that in his first Consulate he had overcome the Sabines; that his fecond Consulate was made illustrious by the share Id. D. H. he had in the Erection of the Tribuneship; that Ibid. now in his third he had already incorporated the Hernici into the Common-wealth, and proposed before the end of it to render the Condition of the Plebeians so happy, that they shou'd no longer envy that of the Patricians. He added, that he promised himself the Roman People must needs allow that they had never received fo many Benefits before from one fingle Citizen.

This Discourse was heard with Pleasure by a People always fond of Novelty. The Senate on the contrary, who were fearful of Cassius's ambitious Spirit, were not without Uneasiness. Every body in Rome, thro' different Motives, impatiently expected the Explanation of this mighty Promise. The first Proposal of Cassius afterwards said a great many things in the Agrapraise of the Plebeians; he observed that Rome owed rian Law. to them not only her Liberty, but also the Empire she had acquired over one part of her Neighbours. He added, that to him it seemed very unjust that so brave a People, who daily exposed their Lives to enlarge the Bounds of the Republic, shou'd languish in a shameful Poverty; while the Senate, the Patricians, Patricians, and the whole Body of the Nobility, alone enjoy'd the Fruits of their Conquests. And to shew the bottom of his Defign he added, that it was his Advice, that, in order to bring the Condition of the poor Citizens to some Equality with that of the Rich, and enable them to fublist, they shou'd take an exact account of all the Lands which had been won from the Enemies, and which the Patricians had feized to their own use, and make a new Division of them, without any regard to those who upon different Pretences had appropriated them to themselves; and that such a Division wou'd give the poor Plebeians an Ability of bringing up Children useful to the State. He added, that nothing but so equitable a Partition cou'd restore the Union and Equality which there ought to be among the Dec. 1. 1. Citizens of one and the same Republic: It was then, fays Livy, that the Agrarian Law was proposed for the first time.

It wou'd be difficult to express the Surprise, Indignation, and Rage of the Senate, at the mention of fuch a Proposal. But in order to give a true Notion to what a Degree it was ruinous to the The Cuffom Great, and defirable by the People, I think I canof the anci- not avoid repeating part of what I have already faid, with relation to these public Lands. When the Romans with mans had gained any confiderable Advantage over their Neighbours, they never granted them Peace without taking from them part of their Territory, which was immediately incorporated with that of Rome. This was indeed the most usual design of their Wars, and the chief Fruit which they looked for from the Victory. Few are to learn, and I have faid elsewhere, that one part of these conquered Lands were fold to reimburse the State for the Expence of the War, another Portion was distributed gratis among poor Plebeians newly fettled at Rome, who had no Inheritance of their own; fometimes a number of Parcels was let out to Farm, and by way of Feoffment, and the Occupiers paid the Rent in Money.

ent Rosegard to be conquer'd Lands.

Money, in Fruits or in Corn, which was fold, and the Produce brought into the public Treasury. And lastly, as the chief Wealth of the Romans in those Days consisted in Cattle and Flocks, what remained of these conquered Lands was lest in Commons, and to serve for Pastures.

This Disposition banished Poverty out of the Re-That and public, and bound the Citizens to its Defence. Butcient Cuthe greedy Patricians deprived the common People for alterof this Sublistence: Tracts of Land of prodigious the Ava-Extent, fet apart for the Support of the whole State, rice of the became infenfibly the Patrimony of a few private Great. Persons. If any Parcel were sold to defray the Charges of a War, the Senators who were the only rich Men in those times, being the Directors of the Sale, caused it to be adjudged to themselves at a very inconfiderable Price; fo that the public Treasury hardly received any Advantage from it. By means of the fame Authority they took either under borrowed Names, or else in their own, the Lands that ought to have been let out to Farm to poor Plebeians, to help them to maintain their Children. Oftentimes by ill-defigned Loans and accumulated Usuries. they got the little Inheritances which the People had received from their Ancestors yielded to them. Lastly, the Rich, by fetting the Land-marks of their Estates further and further, by degrees had swallowed up and confounded most of the Commons; fo that neither the State in general, nor the Plebeians in particular, received any Benefit worth mentioning from these foreign Lands. The Patricians who had got into Possession of them, had inclosed them with Walls: Fine Structures were built upon them; Troops of Slaves taken Prisoners in War manured them for the account of the Great Men of Rome, and now a long Prescription had covered these Usurpations. The Senators and Patricians had hardly any other Income besides these public Lands, which had passed fucceffively thro' different Families by Deaths, Partition, or Sale. Whatever

The Con-Sequences Proposal in

Whatever Shew of Equity there was in Cassius's Proposal, it was impossible to bring it into a Law Caffius's without ruining at once the Senate and chief Nobilithe Senate. ty, and raising an infinite Number of Law-Suits about Trusts among all the Families in Rome, and accordingly most of the Senators stood up against him with great Animofity. Without any respect to his Dignity, they publickly reproached him with his Pride, his Ambition, and the Desire he had of stirring up new Troubles in the Commonwealth. They loudly declared Cassius did not act fo much like a Conful as like a feditious Tribune.

> Cassius always expected to find a general Averfion to his Proposal in the great Men of Rome. But as he flatter'd himself that the People, always fond of Novelties, and enticed by the Hopes of the Partition of the Lands, wou'd declare in his favour, he convened a new Affembly; and among a great many Things which he faid in contempt of the Nobility and in favour of the People, he added, that it shou'd be wholly the fault of this last Order of the Republic, if they did not free themselves at one Stroke from the Indigence to which the Avarice of the Patricians had reduced them! That all they had to do for this purpose, was to make a solemn Law for the Partition of the conquered Lands, of which he had already in some measure proposed to them the Scheme in what he thought of doing with the Territory of the Hernici; that moreover they ought to cause the Money which the poor Plebeians had paid for the Corn that the King of Sicily had fent as a Prefent to Rome to be repaid to them; and that by these just Laws they wou'd for ever banish Poverty, Envy, and Discord.

The People at first received this Proposal with great Applauses; but most of the Tribunes, who cou'd not without Jealoufy see that a Patrician and a Conful shou'd go about to gain to himself the Confidence of the Multitude to their Prejudice, kept a profound Silence, which hindered their Adherents and the Heads of the Tribes from declaring openly

The Tribunes oppose the Lew.

for the Law. Not but that both the one and the other were fenfible of the Advantage it wou'd be of to the People, as we shall find hereafter; but they were unwilling that the People shou'd be obliged for it to a Patrician, and that a Conful shou'd be looked upon as the Author of the Law. Thus, without either approving or opposing it openly, they waited for fome other Opportunity, when they themselves might have in the Eyes of the People the Merit of getting it paffed.

Virginius, Cassius's Colleague in the Confulate, Virginius did not attack it directly: he pretended on the con-opposes bis trary to be fensible of the Justice of it in general; but to elude the Publication of it, he highly blamed the use that Cassius intended to put it to, pretending that by this treacherous Division of the Lands of the Hernici, he had fet the Conquerors and the Vanquished upon a shameful Equality. At the same time he let fall some Suspicions against his Colleague, as if by that extraordinary Distribution proposed in favour of their old Enemies, he had fought to make them his Creatures to the Prejudice of the State itfelf; "What Reason is there, cried he, for restoring to the Hernici the third part of a Territory fo " lawfully conquered? What can be his .End, in e giving the Latins the better part of what remains, " unless it be to plane himself a way to the Tyran-" ny? Rome has cause to fear that those Nations, fill jealous of her Greatness notwithstanding their new Alliance, may one day come to fet Cassius at their Head like a fecond Coriolanus, and under his Conduct attempt to render themselves Masters of the Government. This Comparison with Coriolanus, which recalled Cassius to the People's Minds the thought of a Patrician fends for a whose Memory was so odious to them, cooled their ber of Lafirst Heat for the Reception of this Law. The Tri-tins and bunes themselves gave Intimations that the Author Hernici was suspicious to them too. Cassius perceiving his to come to Party grew weaker than ever, fent underhand for a great Number of Latins and Hernici to come to Rome, telling them, that in Quality of Roman Citizens, it concerned them to be present at the next Assembly to defend their Rights, and to get a Ratification of the Partition of Lands which he had proposed in their Favour.

Upon this, great Numbers of those new Citizens immediately flocked to Rome. Cassius was indifferent whether the Law was received or no; he had proposed it only with a View of raising a Sedition, wherein he might have an Opportunity of putting himself at the Head of one of the Parties, which might be able to make him Mafter of the Government. The Coldness which appeared in the Tribunes disconcerted all his Measures. To engage the People to join him, he never went thro' the City without a numerous Guard of Latins and Hernici. Virginius, in order to disperse this Faction, published an Edict, requiring all the Allies, that were not actually Inhabitants of Rome, to depart that City forthwith. Cassius opposed this Edict, and a Herald by his Order published another directly to the contrary Effect, permitting all fuch as were inrolled Citizens to remain there. This Opposition raised new Commotions in the City: The two Magistrates D. H.1.8. were refolved to be equally obeyed: Their Lictors were quarrelling and fighting every moment; and this Competition between two Parties, which both grew stronger and stronger daily, was just degenerating into a Civil War, when one of the Tribunes.

of the People, named C. Rabuleius, undertook to restore Quiet to the Republic, and, like an able Tribune, to procure the whole Advantage for the People.

best

Artful He remonstrated in a public Assembly, that it was Conduct of an easy matter to reconcile the Opinions of the two the Tribune Consuls; that both were agreed upon the Justice of Rabuleius. the Partition of the Lands of the Hernici in favour of the Roman People; only that Cassius was for extending the Liberality to the Hernici and the Latins, Allies of the Republic. That he thought the best Way wou'd be to begin with doing Justice to the Roman People, which they both agreed ought to be done; and that as to the Proposal made by Cassius in favour of the Allies, but opposed by his Colleague, the Decision of that shou'd be deferred to another time. That as to all the other conquered Lands which made the greatest part of the Roman Territory, the Senate and People wou'd deliberate upon it at leifure as the Importance of fo great an Affair required, and take fuch Measures as shou'd be most agreeable to the good of the Commonwealth.

Under these Appearances of an equitable and moderate Conduct, the Tribune concealed his Defign of pushing the Business of the Partition more briskly than ever, as foon as he had got it out of Cassius's Hands. By this means he made that the Affembly broke up without coming to any Determination as to the general Division of all the conquered Lands. Cassius. ashamed of the ill Success of his ambitious Aims, hid himself in his House, whence (pretending Sickness) he never stirred.

Mean while the Senate, who faw through Rabu-Partition leius's private Defigns, found plainly that the Busi-of the ness of the Partition of the Lands was only delayed. Lands re-They affembled extraordinarily to prevent betimes the Senate. any Attempt that the Tribunes might make to promote it. Several Opinions were offered: the Advice of Appius, that intrepid Defender of the Laws, was, that in order to appeale the People's just Complaints. the Senate shou'd name ten Commissioners to take an exact Information of all fuch Lands as belonged originally to the Public. That they shou'd fell one part of these for the use of the Treasury, distribute another part among the poorer Citizens, who had no Inheritance in Land, restore the Commons, and place fufficient Land-marks where-ever they were necessary. the want of which had caused the Abuses that were then complained of. That as to the remainder of those Lands, they shou'd never let them out for above five Years at a time, and that always at the full Rent,

Rent, and that the Produce shou'd be employed in providing Corn and Pay for the Plebeians that went to War. That this Regulation wou'd hinder them from thinking any more of the Partition of the Lands; and that they wou'd undoubtedly prefer Corn, Money, and a certain Subfiftence during the whole Campaign, to a Slip of Land which they must cultivate with the Sweat of their Brows; and that he knew no furer way of reforming the ancient Abuses, than to restore Things to the Spirit of their Primitive Institution.

A. Sempronius Atratinus, a Man much respected cians elude by the Senate, highly approved of Appius's Advice: the Parti-he only added to it, that they ought to give the Allies and those Nations who had been lately made

Citizens of Rome, to understand, that it was not reafonable they shou'd have a share of the Lands which the Romans had conquered before their Alliance; that each Nation, tho' Allies, might dispose as they thought fit of their own Territory and Conquests; but that as for fuch Lands as shou'd be won by their joint Forces, the Republic, in the Division of them, wou'd have regard to the Affistance she received from her Allies.

The Advice of these two Senators formed the Senatusconsultum. But as the Estates of the principal Men in Rome lay wholly in those conquered Lands, most of the Senators, who wou'd have been ruined by fuch a Regulation, got it added to the Senatusconsultum, in order to stave off the Execution of it, that whereas the Confulate of Cassius and Virginius was upon the Point of expiring, nothing shou'd be done in it till 2. Fabius and Ser. Cornelius, the Confuls elect, entered upon their Office, and that they shou'd be impowered to name the Decemvirs, who were to regulate the Affair of the Partition of the Lands. Nay, and the chief of the Senate refolved among themselves to impeach Cassius, and to profecute him feverely, in order to intimidate all fuch as might be tempted for the future to ftir in this Affair. Some

Some Authors tell us, that as foon as the two new Year of Confuls had taken Poffession of their Dignity, Cas-Rome sius's own Father was the Man that accused him to Cassius is the Senate of having endeavoured to make himself prosecuted. the Tyrant of his Country; and that this fevere Roman, like another Brutus, having laid the Proofs of his Crime before a full Senate, took his Son home to his House, and there caused him to be put to Death in the Presence of his whole Family. But Dionysius Val. Maxi Halicarnasseus informs us, that it was Ceso Fabius, 1. 5. c. 8. Brother to the first Conful, and Valerius, the Grand- D. H. l. S. fon of Publicola, both Quæstors, that made themfelves Parties in this Affair, and who having convened the Affembly of the People according to the Power appertaining to their Office, accused Cassius of having introduced foreign Troops into the City, with defign to oppress the Liberty of his Countrymen.

Cassius appeared in the Affembly dress'd in Mourning, in a Habit conformable to his prefent Circumstances. He represented to the People, to make his Defence their Interest, that it was them the Senate attacked in his Person, and that he was odious to the Patricians, only because he had proposed to oblige them to share with the People the Lands which they had unjustly feiz'd to their own use. But that generous People, who in their greatest Indigence thought Slavery far more insupportable than Poverty, heard with a general Indignation everything that came from a Man of fuch fuspicious Conduct. Thus he faw himself at once abandoned by the People. and profecuted by the Senate; and he was condemned by the unanimous Voice of all his Fellow-citizens. The late Example of Coriolanus, whose Exile had proved fo dangerous, made that Cassius was fentenced to die. That Confular, who had been honoured with two Triumphs, was thrown down from the Top of the Tarpeian Rock; and the Patricians had the Satisfaction Caffius of destroying by the Hands of the Plebeians themselves, condemned a declared Advocate for the Interests of the People.

N 2 A Proceed-

A Proceeding fo refolute quite stunned the Multitude. It was some time before a word was heard again of making Enquiries about the Public Lands; the Execution of the Senatusconsultum, and the Nomination of the Decemvirs, lay suspended. great Affair came to be one of those State-Mysteries which no Body dares to touch upon: The People, intimidated, kept in a profound Silence for some time; but their Necessities infensibly revived their Com-The common People began to regret their plaints. Loss in Cassius: they blamed themselves for his Death; and with a late Acknowledgment, which was little better than downright Ingratitude, gave useless Praises to the Memory of a Man whom themfelves had deftroyed.

Senate's Precautions to awoid the Partition.

The Senate, fearing another Cassius might get into the Confulship, used all imaginable Precautions to keep that supreme Dignity from falling to any but Patricians whom they might fafely rely upon; and they were in a manner absolute Directors of that Election, which was never made but in Assemblies by Centuries, where the Patricians had the Majority of Voices. Thus Lucius Æmilius and Ceso Fabius, M. Fabius and Lucius Valerius, attained successively to the Confulship. In the Resolution which the Senate 269, 270. had taken of letting the Senatusconsultum drop, they thought they cou'd not trust this their secret Design to any more fafely than to Ceso Fabius, and Lucius Valerius, the Accusers of Cassius, and the Men who had precipitated him in a manner with their own Hands from the Tarpeian Rock. The People faw the Artfulness of this Management; they perceived that none were brought into the Confulship but Patricians that wou'd be fure never to nominate the Decemvirs that were to proceed in the Division of the Lands. In these Circumstances, the War, that was indeed almost continual, against the Volsci, being broke out afresh, and the two Consuls, M. Fabius and L. Valerius, who were then in Post, having defired some Recruits to compleat their Legions, a Tribunc bune named C. Menius opposed it, and publickly protested that he would never suffer any Plebeian to give his Name to be inrolled till the Confuls had first brought the Senatusconsultum into a full Assembly of the People, and named those Commissioners that were to put it in Execution. The Confuls, to D. H. I. extricate themselves from this Perplexity, and to 8. Liv. get over the Tribunes Opposition, carried their Tri-Dec. 1, 1. bunal out of Rome, beyond the Jurisdiction of the 2. Tribunes, whose Power and Functions were confined within the City Walls. The Confuls then fent a Summons to the Plebeians that were to march into the Field. These relying upon the Tribunes Opposition, did not appear, and were under no Apprehensions, while that subsisted, that the Confuls wou'd offer to feize them. But those Magifirates took another Method to make themselves obeyed; and without ever returning to Rome, being unwilling to have any Contest with the Tribunes, they gave order for demolishing the Country Seats and cutting down the Trees belonging to the chief Plebeians that had refused to attend their Summons.

Year of Rome

This military Execution brought the People to their Duty; they immediately ran and offered themfelves before the Confuls to receive their Commands. Every one took Arms; they marched against the Enemy; the War was carried on without any remarkable Success; and the Consuls detained the Soldiers in the Field as long as possible, to avoid new Seditions.

But when they were returned, and the time was come qumult on for the Election of new Confuls, Discord raged out account of again with more Fury than ever. The principal the Agra-Men of the Senate, who were the most nearly touch-rian Law. ed by the Inquisition into the public Lands, designed that Post for Appius Claudius, the Son of him we have already spoke of. He had inherited from his Father a considerable Estate, a great number of Clients, and particularly that Haughtiness and Refolution folution which had made him so odious to the Multitude. Accordingly the People wou'd not hear of him, but demanded some of those ancient Senators that had shewn themselves most their Friends. Each Party remained obstinate in the Resolution they had taken. The Senate flattered themselves that they shou'd carry this Affair with a high hand in an Affembly by Centuries. The Confuls call'd it as usual, and according to the Power annexed to their Dignity; but the People, by the Infligation of their Tribunes, made fo much Noise, and there were fuch violent and bitter Contests and Disputes, that it was impossible to proceed to the Election that This was the private aim of the Tribunes, who, with a Prefumptuousness never before heard of, convened a fecond Assembly for next Day. The Confuls and the Senate in a Body did not fail to be at it; and they demanded of the Tribunes by what Authority they durst take upon them to prefide at the Election of Confuls. They replyed, that their Concern for the People's Welfare obliged them to prevent their having Tyrants imposed upon them for Magistrates; and that if the Senate did not chuse Men of unquestionable Characters, they shou'd find ways to prevent any Election that might be prejudicial to the People. Some Senators, provoked at this Audaciousness, were immediately for having the first Conful name a Dictator; who by the fovereign and absolute Power of his Office, might feverely punish the Authors of these Innova-But as there was room to fear that the People wou'd openly revolt, the wifer and more moderate part of the Senate thought it would be imprudent in such a Conjuncture to venture the supreme Authority among a whole People work'd up to An Inter- Fury. A more gentle Course was taken. nate contented themselves with creating an Inter-Rex, as was practis'd under the Kings during any Vacancy of the Throne. This short-lived Magistracy was given to A. Sempronius Atratinus, who deliver-

Rex. D. H. 1.8. Year of Rome

ed it over to Sp. Largius. That Magistrate was of a Spirit inclining to a Reconciliation, and probably fearing left if the Senate continued obstinate to promote Appius to the Consulate, the Opposition of the Tribunes and People might at length raife a dangerous Sedition, he thought it was the Republic's Interest to put off Appius's Election to more peaceful and favourable Times; and he managed both Parties so artfully, that he prevailed on each to abate somewhat of its demands. It was concluded that the Election shou'd still be made as usual, and by the Votes of the Centuries; and the two Parties agreed in the choice of the Confuls.

A Union being brought about upon these Condi- Conful chetions, they proceeded only for form fake to the fen by the The Tribunes got that People, Election of the Confuls. Dignity bestowed upon C. Julius Iulus, whom every Body knew to be of the People's Party, and a Slave to the Tribunes. The Patricians named for his Colleague Q. Fabius Vibulanus, descended of a Family made illustrious by almost continual Consulates, and who without having ever offended the People, had nevertheless upon all Occasions stood up for the Rights and Prerogatives of the Senate.

e

0

1-

The People flattered themselves with Hopes that having a Conful at their Devotion, they should now get the Commissioners to be named, and at length obtain the Partition of the Lands. But a plain Instance was then seen of the Difference there is between those that raise themselves to high Dignities by base and abject Compliances, and those generous Men whose personal Merits, as well as Birth, naturally place those Honours upon them. C. Julius did indeed make fome flight Attempt to publish the Senatusconfultum, but scarce durst he so much as maintain his Opinion against that of Fabius. Senate's Conful, if we may use such an Expression, had assumed so great a Superiority over the People's, tho' their Dignities were equal, that there feemed to be but one in the Republic all this Year. Fabius

N 4

Fabius obliged him to go out of Rome along with him, and to march against the Equi and the Veientes. They were Nations of Tuscany that had made Inroads upon the Territories of the Romans: These latter made Reprisals, and this Expedition terminated in the Ravage of the Country.

These petty Wars were the ordinary Expedients used by the Consuls, who to divert the common Complaints of the People, led them out of Rome upon that Pretence, and carried the War abroad with intent to give their Soldiers, at the Enemy's Cost, a Substitutance that might make them forget their old Claims. But these continual Wars made them still more fierce, and the next Peace generally revived, in those unruly Spirits, the Discord which the War had only suspended.

It broke out afresh upon the Election of the Con-The People, being tied up to chuse none but Nobles, cou'd at least have wished they might have had only fuch of that order as feemed to be Plebei-They even affirmed loudans in their Inclination, ly in the Affemblies, that 'twas enough the People wou'd fuffer the Confuls to be always taken out of the Body of Patricians, without being forced likewife to receive fuch as were most averse to the Partition of the Lands. The Senate, on the contrary, referved that Dignity only for those in whom they found most Courage and Resolution; each Party stood to its Pretensions with equal warmth; but at length the Affair was accommodated. They agreed to go by the fame Rule as in the last Election. The People again named their Conful, tho' still one of the Patricians: it was Sp. Furius; and the Senate

The People again named their Consul, tho' still one Rome of the Patricians: it was Sp. Furius; and the Senate 272. Liv. chose Cesa Fabius, the Man that even in his Quæll. 2.

It in the florship had destroyed Cassius. The Business then principiol. in Agitation was to continue the War against the principiol. Agui and the Tuscans, who had renewed their Inras. 1. 2. cursions. The new Consuls ordered the People to Val. Max. take Arms, but a Tribune named Sp. Icilius vigoril. 9. c. 3. ously opposed it. He declared he wou'd make the fame

fame Opposition against all the Decrees that shou'd iffue from the Senate, let it be upon what Affair it wou'd, till the Senatusconfultum was brought into the Affembly of the People, and the Commissioners named in pursuance thereof. That it was just the fame Thing to him whether the Country was ravaged by Enemies, or unjustly possessed by Usurpers. In the mean while the Æqui and Veientes put all to Fire and Sword in the Territory of Rome, without the Senate's being able to find Troops to Division] resist them, thro' the Obstinacy of the Tribune who forum a-hinder'd their making any Levy. In this Perplexity, mong the Appius, whom we spoke of before, thought of an Tribunes. Expedient which proved very fuccessful. He re-Liv. Dec. presented that the Power of the Tribuneship was 1.1. 2. formidable only by the Union of the Tribunes; and that if the opposition of a fingle Tribune was of force to suspend the Execution of a Decree of the Senate, it had the fame Prerogative as to the Deliberations of his Colleagues. That it was not impossible there might be a Jealousy among them; that their Business was to endeavour to bring it to a Division, and privately to engage some one of them to enter into the Senate's Interests. This Advice was approved and followed; the Senators applied themselves to gain the Friendship of the Tribunes. and they fucceeded: Four of that College declared in a public Assembly, that they cou'd not bear that the Enemies, by Favour of the Divisions that reigned in the City, shou'd thus lay waste the Country with Impunity. Icilius had the Shame and Mortification of feeing his Opposition over-ruled; the People took Arms, and followed the Confuls to the War. For feveral Years there was a kind of alternative of Troubles at home and Wars abroad, nor cou'd the People all this while bring about the Publication of the Law. They laid the whole blame upon the Confuls, and to be revenged of them, Soldiers were found that were not ashamed, at their return cufed.

return from the Army, to turn Accusers or Witnesses against their Generals, as if they had wanted Courage or Capacity in the Command of the Army.

Confuls ac-

Scarce was a Conful out of his Office, but he was immediately cited before the Assembly of the People, that is indeed before a Tribunal where his most

Menenius inveterate Enemies where his Judges. Thus Menecondemn'd. nius, the Son of Agrippa, was accused, upon Pretence that during his Confulate the Enemy had tak-

The Tribunes, Q. Consien the Fort of Cremera. Year of Rome 277 dius and T. Genutius, loudly demanded his Death; D. H. I. but the Senate and all his Friends folicited fo earneftly 9.

in his Behalf, that he was only condemned to pay a Fine that amounted to two thousand Asses, that is, about twenty Crowns of our Money, a very inconfiderable Sum with regard to the Time we write in, but of great consequence in that Age, and in a Republic where the prime Magistrates lived by the Labour of their Hands. Nay we may reckon this Fine excessive, with respect to Menenius, whose Father had left him no other Patrimony but his Glory and his Poverty. His Friends offered generoufly to pay it for him, but he wou'd not fuffer it; but pierced to the Heart with the Injustice and Ingratitude of his Fellow-citizens, he shut himself up in his House, where Grief and Hunger soon dispatched him.

ed.

278.

The Conful The People fell next upon another Confular, Sp. Servi-named Spurius Servilius, who succeeded Menenius lius accuf in the Confulship. It was charged upon him as a Crime, that in a Battel, wherein he had defeated Year of the Tuscans, he had lost some Troops by pursuing Rome the Enemy with more Courage than Prudence. But this was only the Pretence; the Victory he had gained was a full Apology for that fault. The real Crime of both these Consulars was the having omitted, during their Confulates, to name the Commissioners missioners that were to make the Partition of the Servilius, tho' not unacquainted with the People's Bitterness against him, had Recourse neither to Intreaties, nor the Interest of his Friends to escape their Rage. He faced the Danger boldly, and without changing either his Habit or his Countenance, appeared before the Assembly of the People according to his Summons, and addressing his Speech to the Multitude, 'If I am sent for hither, fays he, to give an Account of what pass'd in the last Battle where I commanded, I am ready to do it. But if this is only a Pretence to destroy me, as I suspect, I desire you wou'd save me a needless Trouble. Here is my Body and my Life, which you may dispose of just as you please.

Some of the more moderate among the People D. H. 1.9. having cried out that he shou'd take Courage, and go on with his Defence: 'Since I am to deal with Servilius's Judges, and not with Enemies, added he, I am Defence.

to inform you, Romans, that I was made Confulwith Virginius at a time when the Enemy was

Mafter of the Country, and Famine and Differ-

tion raged in the City. It was in this perplexing

· Conjuncture that I was called to the Government of the State. I marched against the Enemies, whom I defeated in two Battels, and forced to flut themselves up in their Towns. And while they were in a manner block'd up there by the Terror of your Arms, I in my turn ravaged their Territory; I got a prodigious quantity of Corn which I brought to Rome, where I restored Plenty. What Fault have I committed thus far? Am

I guilty of any Crime in having won two Victories? But, fay my Adversaries, I lost a great many Men in the last Engagement: Are Battels

then to be fought against Nations long hardned

to War, and that defend themselves stoutly, without Blood being shed on both Sides? What

· Deity

Deity has undertaken for the Roman People that they shall gain Victories without Loss? Is any Man here to learn that Glory is acquired only by great Danger? I engaged with Troops more numerous than those you trusted to my Conduct; however, after an obstinate Fight I broke them. I put their Legions in Diforder, and at length they fled. Cou'd I refuse to follow Victory when • the went before me? Was it indeed in my Power to restrain your Soldiers, who were carried away by their Courage, and who warmly purfued a scattered Enemy? If I had sounded a Retreat, if I had led our Soldiers back to their Camp, wou'd not your Tribunes this Day have accused " me of having an Understanding with the Foe? If your Enemies rallied again, if they were supported by a Body of Troops that advanced to their Aid; in a word, if we were obliged to begin the Battel quite afresh; and if in this Action I lost fome Men, is it not the usual Chance of War? Can you find Generals that will undertake the · Command of your Armies, if you make it a Condition that they shall bring home again to Rome every Soldier that goes out with them into the Field? Do not then enquire whether at the · End of a Battel I have loft fome Men, but judge of my Conduct by my Victory, and by the Effects of that Victory. If it be true that I drove your Enemies out of your Territory; that I killed great numbers of their Men in two Battels; that I forced the shattered Remains of their Armies to flut themselves up in their strong Towns; and that I enriched Rome and your Soldiers with the Booty which they got in the Enemy's Country; Let your Tribunes stand up and tell me to my • Face wherein I have failed in the Duties of a good But that is not what I fear; these Accufations are only used as a Colour for their exercifing with impunity the Hatred and Animofity, which they bear to the Senate and the whole Order

der of Patricians. My true Crime, as well as that of the illustrious Menenius, is our neither of us having nominated, during our Confulates, those Decemvirs whom you have fo long fighed for. ' But was it possible we shou'd do it in the Hurry and Tumult of Arms, and while our Enemies were at our Gates, and Discord in the City? And if we cou'd have done it, know, Romans, that Servilius wou'd never have given Authority to a Law which cannot be put in Practice without raising a general Disturbance in every Family, without occasioning an infinite number of Law-Suits, and without ruining the chief Families of the Republic, and who are her firmest Support. Will you never ask any thing of the Senate but what is prejudical to the common Good of our Country, and never ask but only by Seditions? If a Senator dares but represent to you the Injustice of your Pretensions; if a Conful does not speak the feditious Language of your Tribunes; if he defends couragiously the Sovereign Power with which he is invested, you immediately cry out, A Tyrant! Scarce is he out of his Post, but he is over-whelmed with Accutations. by your unjust Plebiscitum you took away the Life of Menenius, no less a great Captain than a good Citizen. Ought you not to die with shame at the Thoughts of having fo cruelly perfecuted the Son of that Menenius Agrippa to whom you are obliged for your Tribunes, and for that very Power which onow makes you fo furious? You may perhaps think I speak with too much Freedom in the present State of of my Fortune; but I fear not Death; condemn • me if you dare; Life cannot but be insupportable to a General, that is reduced to answer for his very · Victories: And at worst, to undergo the same Fate with Menenius can never be a Dishonour to me.

This generous Patrician dispersed the Danger by Year of his Courage; and the People, ashamed of the Death Rome of Menenius, durst not condemn Servilius, who was <sup>278</sup>. acquitted by a majority of Voices. The Preserva-Liv. 1. 2. tion D. H. 1. 9.

tion of that Consular, escaped from the Fury of the Tribunes, did not make them abate anything of their Pretensions as to the Division of the Lands. They continued to insect the Multitude with the usual Poison of their seditions Harangues; at length, one

D.H.1.9. of those Tribunes named Cn. Genucius, a daring enterprizing Man, and not Uneloquent, publickly cited L. Emilius Mammercus and Vop. Julius, both Confuls that Year, to nominate immediately the Commissioners, that, according to the Senatus confultum, were to proceed upon the Partition of the Lands, and upon setting up Land-marks, that might put a stop to all Usurpations for the future.

Partition

The two Confuls, to elude his Demand, at first excused themselves from taking cognizance of an Affair that past so long before their Consulate: And to give an Appearance of Justice to a Refusal, that indeed proceeded only from their Concern for the Interest of their Body, they added that that Senatust consultum was become void by Inexecution; and that every body must know there was this Difference between Laws, and the mere Decrees of the Senate.

that the one were perpetual and unviolable, whereas the Senatusconfulta were of no longer Duration, than the Magistracy of him to whom their Execution was committed.

Enterprize of Genucius.

The Tribune, without giving any heed to that Distinction, wou'd gladly have attacked those Magistrates directly; but as he foresaw it wou'd be not easy Matter to ruin two Consuls, while they were actually invested with the Sovereign Power, he turned his Resentment upon A. Manlius, and L. Furius; whose Offices were but just expired. He cited them before the Assembly of the People; and accused them of having neglected to name the Commissioners, with intent to deprive their poor Citizens and brave Soldiers of the Share which they had so well deserved in the conquered Lands. That surious Tribune exhorted the People to do Justice to themselves, and added, that there was no way but the Punishment of those great Criminals, and the Terror of such an Example, to reduce their Successors to execute at length the Senatusconfultum; and with horrible Oaths. that he wou'd profecute this Affair to the Death, he appointed the Day when the People shou'd enquire This Accusation and these violent Menaces alarm'd the Patricians. They faw, with no less Indignation than Sorrow, that the Tribunes aimed equally at their Lives and their Fortunes, and that there feemed to be a laid Defign of making away with all the Senators one after anothor. Every one blamed himself for his Patience and Moderation: Several private Councils were held, the Refult of which remained buried in a profound Secrecy. In the mean while, the People, who triumphed beforehand, infolently boafted that in spite of all the Senate's Artifices, the Law for the Division of the Lands shou'd certainly pass; nay, that it shou'd be fealed too with the Blood of those that had opposed it, and that the Death of Cassius shou'd not go unrevenged. The Senate equally concealed their Fear and their Resentment. But the very Day before this Id. D. H. great Matter was to be decided, Genutius was found Ibid. 1. 9. dead in his Bed, without the least Marks of Poison Sudden or any other Violence. His Body was laid out in the Trithe Forum; and the common People, whose Minds bune Geeafily run into Superstition, imagined that the Godsnutius. disapproved his Enterprize, tho' the wifer fort were inclined to suspect that some Patricians had been the Ministers of the Deity. Nevertheless, this Religious Notion, which had got Poffession of the Spirits Zonaras. of the Multitude, inspired them with a great Veneration for the Senate, in whose Favour Heaven seemed to have declared in fo visible a Manner. Partition of the Lands was not fo much as mentioned for fome time afterwards. The Tribunes were confounded, and the Senate might have refumed all their Authority, if upon this Revolution they had not gone about to strain it too high.

of

There

There was occasion for raising of Troops, and lifting the Legions to march against the Enemy. The Confuls, guarded by their Lictors, held their Tribunal as usual in the Forum; and to make the People feel their Power, either fined or whipt those Citizens that did not appear the very moment they were called to give their Names, and often without the least regard to Justice. A Proceeding so severe already began to alienate the People's Hearts; and the unjust and violent manner, in which the Consuls attempted to lift for a common Soldier a Plebeian that had been a Centurion, made their Discontent break out into Action.

Volero's Revolt. 1. 1. 2. Year of Rome 280.

1

This Plebeian, named P. Volero, had diftinguished himself in the Wars by his Valour, and was Liv. Dec. esteemed a good Officer. Nevertheless, without regard to his past Services, or the Posts he had born, he was fummoned to lift himself as a common Soldier. He refused to obey, and complain'd publicly that the Confuls only wanted to difgrace him because Those Magistrates, upon his Flor. l. 1. he was a Plebeian. Refusal, sent a Lictor to seize him; and upon his > making Refistance, ordered that he shou'd be beaten with Rods, a Punishment which the Generals used to inflict upon their mutinous Soldiers. They go to take hold of his Person; but Volero full of Courage and Indignation pushes back the Lictor, and striking him a Blow on the Face implores at the fame time the Protection of the Tribunes. As they feemed to give no Regard to his Cries: "I appeal to "the People, fays he, addressing himself to the Con-" fuls, fince our Tribunes, intimidated by your Power, had rather see a Citizen abused even in their "Presence, than expose themselves to be strangled in their Beds like Genutius." Then turning to the People, who feemed provoked at the Violence that was offered him: "Affift me, Comrades, cried he; we have no other Remedy left us against so great a Tyranny but Force.

> > The

The People, animated by this Discourse, take Fire, rise up, attack the Lictors that guarded the Consuls. They break their Fasces, they disperse them; the Majesty of the Consulship is not able to with-hold the People's Fury, and the Consuls are forced to fly and hide themselves.

The Senate immediately meets; the Confuls make their Report of Volero's Rebellion, and conclude, that he ought to be punished as a Disturber of the public Peace, and thrown down from the Tarpeian Rock. The Tribunes, on the contrary, demand Justice upon the Confuls, and complain that those Magistrates, in Contempt of the Lex Valeria, and of an Appeal to the Affembly of the Roman People, shou'd offer to fcourge a brave Citizen in fo ignominious a manner, as if he had been the vileft Slave: A new Caufe of Diffention between those two Orders of the Re-Volero, who fear'd the Power of the Confuls, demanded the Tribuneship, which he looked upon as an inviolable Asylum, which would shelter him from the Fury of his Enemies. To obtain that Office, he boafted in a public Affembly, that if ever he were invested with that Dignity, he wou'd take fuch Methods, that the People shou'd never be oppress'd by the Senate's Power for the future.

The Plebeians, who were always the Majority in those Assemblies, charmed with the Hopes which Volero gave them, granted him all their Voices. He was elected Tribune, in spite of all the Cabals and Volero Brigues of the Patricians; he enter'd upon the Ex-made Triercise of that Function in the Consulate of L. Pinarius and P. Furius. The People, who observed rear of every Step he took, expected that to revenge him-Rome self of the two Consulars, who had ill treated him, 281, he wou'd immediately prosecute them in the way of Justice; but he had farther Views. He turned his Resentment upon the whole Body of the Senate, and undertook to deprive them of the Authority they had in the Election of the Tribunes.

We

Volero establishes the Electi. on of Tribunes, in bly by Tribes.

We have already faid, that there was then but two Ways of convening the Assemblies of the Roman People, one by Curiæ, and the other by Cen-The Difference between them was, that in turies. the Affem- the Affemblies by Curiæ the Voices were counted by their Number, which gave the People the Superiority; whereas in the Assemblies by Centuries, as the Richer fort composed alone more Centuries than all the People, the Advantage lay wholly on their fide. In other respects, the way of convening both those Asfemblies was the fame; that Prerogative belonged to the Senate: And as in those Days none but Patricians cou'd be the Augurs, they were the Men that took the Auspices. Volero perceiving that the Authority of those Augurs, joyned to that of the Senate, had a great Influence in both Affemblies, refolved to remove the Election of the Tribunes out of the Affembly by Curiæ into an Affembly held another way.

D. H.1.9.

He represented to the People in a general Assembly, that the Senate and Patricians were absolute Mafters of the Government; that the chief Dignities of the Republic, all Officers Civil and Military, and that of the Priest-hood itself, were confined to their That besides these particular Advantages, they had also the Prerogative of determining by a Senatusconfultum when any Affembly should be held, of prefiding in it, of preparing the Deliberation by Auspices, which the Ministers of Religion, Patricians by Birth, always interpreted according to the Views and Interests of their own Order; and lastly, that a new Senatusconfultum must be obtained to confirm what was there refolved on. That by means of these various Privileges which they had got into their own Hands, they had but little less Power in the Assemblies held by Curia, tho' there the Voices were gathered by Tale, than in those where the Votes were reckoned only by Centuries. That it was high time to break all these Chains, which the Senate had formed to shackle the Suffrages of the Plebeians. He demanded that the Election of Tribunes shou'd be made made for the future in an Affembly by Tribes, where all the Roman Citizens that then composed the thirty Tribes, as well the Inhabitants of the Country, as those of the City, were equally allowed a Vote, without subjection to any Senatusconfulta or to the influence of the Augurs.

Ó

d ir

5,

a

1,

y

1-ne

y,

nns

to

in es tes

gh

ad

He be de

All the Plebeians warmly declared for a Proposal, which by freeing them and their Magistrates from their Dependance upon the Confuls, brought a new Accession of Power to the People at the Expence of the Authority of the Senate. The Confuls, on the other hand, the Senate and the whole Order of Patricians opposed it with all their Might. presented in divers Assemblies held upon this Affair, that so dangerous a Law cou'd not be received without a daring Contempt of the Gods, and of all that was most holy in Religion, and that it must break those Bonds which tied the Citizens one to another, and ruin that Subordination which was fo necessary for the maintaining of Peace and Union among the feveral Orders of the State. Each Party stood up for their Pretentions with equal Animofity. the common Subject of all Disputes between those two Orders of the Commonwealth. The Contest about the Partition of the Lands was dropt; all the Endeavours of the Great and of the People feemed to be fixed upon the Decision of this Affair, nor cou'd any Man foresee which way it wou'd end.

A dreadful Peftilence, which infected both the City and Country, interrupted the Course of these Dissertions. Each being taken up with his particular Losses and his own Preservation, less Attention was given to the Business of the Public. But this Calamity proving as short as it was violent, the Tribunes immediately resumed their Prosecution of the Law proposed by Volero. That popular Magistrate Volero being just out of his Office, the People, who thought continued, they could not succeed without his Assistance, continued him in the Tribuneship for the following Year,

2

hot-against

Rome 282.

notwithstanding all the Caballing and Opposition

The Senate thought it necessary to set up against made by the Patricians.

fets Appius him a Man of a refolute Character, and one not to be shaken by the Clamours and Menaces of the Peo-Volero. ple. They pitched upon Appius Claudius, and raif-Year of ed him to the Confulship without his Participation. It was observed that he was so far from making In-D.H.I. 9. terest for that high Post, that he did not so much as appear in the Affembly on the Day of Election. He had inherited his Father's inviolable Adherence to the Senate's Interests; but the heroical Constancy of the former was degenerated into Severity in the Son. He was a Man naturally proud, tho' without Ambition, was always for carrying things with a high Hand, and for owing nothing to Persuasion, or to that artful Management which is fo necessary in the Government of a free People. They gave him for his Colleague T. Quintius, who was of a Character directly opposite, naturally mild and infinuating, and one that had found ways to get the Love of the People, tho' he was looked upon to be one of the principal Leaders of the Party of the Nobility. Senate chose him on purpose, hoping that his Counfels and Example wou'd foften what was too harsh and haughty in the Manners of Appius.

> These two Consuls being entered upon the Execution of their Office, immediately convened the Senate. The Business was to think of the most proper Methods for hindring the Publication of Volero's

Law.

Appius advised, that upon some Pretence, which is never wanting between Neighbours, a new War shou'd be immediately undertaken. He represented, that the Senate being to govern a People of an unquiet Genius, greedy of Novelties, and incited by feditious Tribunes, Experience had shewn that they cou'd never have Peace within the State, but when they carried the War abroad, and led the People out of a City where Idleness nourished a Spirit of Murmuring and Rebellion.

n

-

IS

of 1.

h

0

e

1

r

d

1-

e

1-

ır

t

Quintius was of a contrary Opinion; he faid, he thought it unjust to make War upon Nations against whom the Republic had not then any Cause of Complaint; that the People themselves wou'd quickly perceive the Senate's Intent in so doing, and it they refused to take Arms, they must use Force to compel them; which cou'd not fail of raising a Sedition, wherein it was to be fear'd the Majesty of the Senate might be exposed to Insults. As Quintius was this Month in Possession of the Lictors, and of the chief Authority, his Colleague was obliged to yield to his Sentiments, which were followed by the Majority of the Senate.

In the mean time Volero, being fully refolved to Volero eneffect his Defigns, was no fooner entered upon his fe-larges the cond Tribunate, but he proposed a-new the Law for Law. Affemblies of the People by Tribes. He added, in Conjunction with his Colleagues, that he demanded in favour of the People, that the Ædiles shou'd be chose in them as well as the Tribunes, and that they shou'd have Cognizance of all Affairs which the People had a Right to determine: Which indeed was neither more nor less than conveying the whole Authority of the Government out of the Hands of the Senate, into those of the People. The Senate was convened again upon these extraordinary Propofals. Quintius, naturally good-natur'd, and a thorough Republican, tho' without being popular, was for conceding fomewhat in favour of a brave People, from. whom, he faid, the Republic daily received important Services. But Appius, haughty and fevere, aver-The Sered, that they shou'd betray the Senate's Interest by nate's Opan Indulgence which would show not so much the Position to Mercy as the Weakness of the Government. the Tribunes, when they had thus stripp'd them of their Power, wou'd think they did them great Favour if they left them so much as the Ensigns of their Dignity. He concluded, that after fo many vain Speeches, Speeches, which had been made upon this fame Subject, nothing but a bold stroke of Authority was capable of putting a stop to the seditious Enterprizes That the Patricians, with their of the Tribunes. Clients, ought to take Arms, drive the People out of the Forum, and fall upon all without distinction that dared to be the Protectors of fo pernicious a Law. This Advice was rejected as too violent, and even The Senate came to a Temperament; dangerous. They defired of the Tribunes that they wou'd banish out of the public Assemblies those tumultuous Contests and Disputes, in the Confusion of which it was difficult to diffinguish what was Justice and Reason; that the Consuls too might peaceably, and without Interruption, represent to the People the true Interests of the Commonwealth; and that then they might in concert agree upon fuch measures as shou'd be most conformable to the common Good of the People and of the Senate.

The Tribunes durst not refuse to come into so equitable a Proposal. Quintius mounted the Rostrum; he spoke in so lively and so affectionate a manner of the Advantages of Peace, and the Calamities that attended Divisions and Innovations in the Laws, that if Appius had not spoken immediately after him, the People seemed inclined to have rejected Volero's Propofal.

But that Conful, who understood no way of dealing with Men, but with a high Hand, instead of making the true Use of the Impression which his Colleague's Discourse had made in the Minds of his Audience, sell into Invectives, which had the very same Essect as the seditious Harangues of the Tribunes, and only irritated the Plebeians afresh, and gave them a new Aversion to the Senate. He upbraided them in Expressions disagreeable to the Senate itself, and edious to the People, with their first Desertion upon the Mons Sacer, and the Erection of the Tribuneship, which he said was extorted from the Senate, only by an open Revolt, and the Danger

Appius's hateful Speech.

bas

es

ir

ut

at

W.

en

t;

aus

it bi nd

ue

y

ne

lo

0-

a

1-

ne

y

3-

1-

of

is

d

r

e

Danger of a Civil War: That it was no Wonder a Tribunal fet up by Rebels shou'd produce nothing but Tumults and Discords, which wou'd never end but with the entire Subversion of the Republic; that even already few or no Footsteps were left of the ancient Form of Government: That the most sacred Laws were abolished; the Consular Power defpised, and the Dignity of the Senate debased: That their Impudence was now grown to fuch a heighth, that they were for excluding from the Election of Tribunes the Senatusconfulta and the Auspices, that is to fay, all that was most Sacred and most Venerable in Religion and the State; that e're long they wou'd quite abolish the Senate, whose Power they were actually diminishing every Day, in order to raife upon its Ruins a Supreme Council of the Tribunes of the People. He prayed the Gods to deprive him of Life, rather than fuffer him to be Spectator of fo strange a Revolution. 'And to give you at once, adds he, turning to the People, a full Knowledge of my Sentiments, I declare that I will for ever resolutely oppose the Promulga-' tion of fo unjust a Law; and I hope, before your 'Tribunes have brought it to bear, I shall make ' you know the Extent of the Power of a Con-

" ful. It was not without the hottest Rage and Indigna- Great Fertion that the People heard so injurious a Discourse, ments be-The oldest of the Tribunes, named Lectorius, who confuls was accounted one of the brayest Soldiers in the and Tri-Republic, answered him, that no Body was then bunes. to learn that he came of a Family wherein Info-D. H. ibid lence and Inhumanity were Hereditary; that his Liv. Dec. Father was the most bitter Enemy the Peop'e ever 1.1.2. had, and that he himself was less their Consul than their Tyrant. But that he declared to him in his turn, that spite of his Dignity, and his Power of a Conful, the Elections of the Tribunes and that of the Ædiles shou'd for the future be made in the Comitia of Tribes. He fwore by all that was most Sacred,

Sacred, that he wou'd lose his life, or get the Law pass'd that very Day. At the same time he commanded the Consul to depart the Assembly, that he might make no Disturbance in the Collection of the Suffrages.

Appius despised his Order, and cried out to him that he wou'd have him to know that tho' a TriD. H. ibid bune, he was no more than a private Man, without 1.9, any real Magistracy, and whose whole Power confisted in forming an Opposition to such Decrees of the Senate as might be prejudicial to the Plebeians.

Thereupon calling about him his Relations, his Friends and his Clients, who were very numerous, he prepared to oppose Force to Force. having conferr'd tumultuously with his Colleagues caused Proclamation to be made by a Herald, that the College of Tribunes decreed that the Conful shou'd be led to Prison: And immediately an Officer belonging to that Tribune had the Prefumption to offer to seize upon the chief Magistrate of the Republic, But the Senators, the Patricians, and that Multitude of Clients which attended Appius, placed him in the middle of 'em, and repulsed the Officer Lectorius, transported with Anger, advanced himself to affift him and called upon the People for their Aid. The Multitude rifes; the most mutinous join the Tribune; nothing is heard but confused Cries proceeding from mutual Animosity, From Reproaches they quickly come to blows; and as in those Days it was unlawful to wear Swords in the City, each Party makes Arms of Benches, or Stones, or any thing they can lay Hands on. It is very likely this Commotion had not ended without the spilling of much Blood, had not Quintius got fome Confulars and ancient Senators to convey Appius from this Tumult, while he laboured to appeafe the Tribunes. But Night coming on, more than any thing elfe, obliged the two Parties, equally irritated against each other, to separate.

The

C

1

t

f

The Tumult began again next Morning. The People spirited up by their Tribunes, and especially by Lectorius who had been wounded the Night before, get Possession of the Capitol, fortify themfelves there, and feem resolved to begin an open The Senate on their part assembles, as well to deliberate upon Ways to quiet the Sedition, as to reconcile the two Confuls; the first of which being the more moderate, was for conceding something in Favour of the People, whereas Appius protested, that he wou'd sooner die than consent to give up the least Point to a seditious Rabble. This Disorder lasted several Days, Quintius, who was not disagreeable to the Multitude, accosts the Tribunes, fooths them, and intreats them to facrifice their private Resentments to the Public Good, and to restore the City to Peace and Concord. The Tribunes answer, that his Colleague was the Man he shou'd apply to, and that he alone was the Cause of the Division that raged in the Republic. they thought it was no unjust thing they proposed, in demanding that the Election of Tribunes shou'd be made only in an Affembly by Tribes. this excluded neither the Senators, nor the Patricians, nor the Knights, who all were infcribed in fome of the Thirty Tribes, and confequently wou'd always have their weight in the Affemblies by Tribes as private Citizens. That the People defired only that they might not prefide in them, but that this Honour might be allowed their particular Magistrates. That whenever this unexceptionable Law was admitted, the City wou'd quickly be reftor'd to Peace; tho' they wou'd not however fay, that they wou'd defift from profecuting Appius afterwards, for having wounded Lectorius, whose Person was Sacred.

Quintius replied with much Gentleness, that in so great a Disorder as then happened, it was impossible to charge Appius with the Tribune's Wound more than any Body else; that he wou'd have them

forget

forget this particular Injury for the sake of the Public Peace, and make a Compliment of it to the Senate. From thence he took occasion to infinuate to them, that it was not unlikely the Senate, with their usual Goodness, might comply with the Law in favour of the People, if they referred it absolutely to their Decision; that this was perhaps the surest way to succeed: Whereas if the People pretended to carry it by Force, there would always be found a great number of young Senators and Patricians that would make it a point of Honour to resist them.

The Tribunes, who knew Quintius's Prudence, were well fatisfied he wou'd never have made them fuch Advances without being beforehand affured of the Senate's Disposition: And as all that was now to be done was by a seeming Deserence to save the Honour of that Body, the Tribunes, contented with having the essential part granted them, did not quarrel about the Form: They assured Quintius that the People wou'd stand to whatever he shou'd transact with the Senate on their part. The Tribunes took this Course the more readily, because it did not at all bind their Successors, who might resume the Prosecution of the Law the next Year, if the Senate's Resolutions were not such as the People expected.

Quintius Quintius having left the Tribunes, convened the prevails on Senate, to whom he gave an Account of their prethe Senate fent Inclination. He then asked the Opinion of the to yeild to Confulars, beginning with P. Valerius Publicola.
the People. That Senator faid that the Tribune's Wound not being the Effect of any personal Quarrel between Appius and Lectorius, he thought the Resentment of it shou'd be buried in an Oblivion of the Tumult it self that had occasion'd it. But that as to the Main of the Question, which was, whether the Senate had a right to debate the Law before it was proposed to the People, and whether they shou'd allow Assemblies to be held for chusing Tribunes, without a Senatusconfultum, and without Auspices,

he

he shou'd guide himself for his particular by what shou'd be determined by Plurality of Voices.

This Confular did not think fit to explain himfelf first upon so delicate a Point, probably out of confideration for the People, whom the Patricians and Senators of the Valerian Family fince the time of Valerius Publicola, and from his Example, took great care to please. The Affair however was disputed with much Heat: But Quintius, who was naturally persuasive, managed the several Spirits he had to deal with fo artfully, that he at length brought the Senate to yield to the People this other part alfo of their Authority. Appius opposed it with all his might; he called both Gods and Men to witness, that the Republic was betrayed, and that they were submitting to a Law more detrimental to the lawful Authority of the Senate, than those which had been promulgated upon the Mons Sacer. But he cou'd not shake the Resolution of the ancient Senators: They very well knew, that, tho' the Conful depended only upon the Senate, each particular Senator on the contrary, was, in a manner, in the Power of the People, who fince the business of Coriolanus, had created themselves a right of trying the Patricians. Thus either the Love of Peace, or Year of Fear of the Tribunes Refentment, united infenfibly Rome most of the Voices in Quintius's Opinion. The 282. D. Law was published with the Consent of both Orders, H. 1. 9. Liv. Dec. and they now for the first time elected Tribunes in 1.1.2. an Affembly convened by Tribes. Piso the Historian, as Livy informs us, fays that five Tribunes were elected; that no more than two had been created upon the Mons Sacer, to whom three more were added upon this Occasion. However this be. Appius, who was yet more provoked with the Senate than with the People themselves, said it was fcandalous in them to abandon him in an Enterprize which they themselves had engaged him in, by raifing him to a Dignity which he never courted. He employed it afterwards only to make the Plebeians feel that the Victory which their Tribunes had gained over the Senate, had not in the least quelled his Courage.

The Æqui and the Volsci during these Divisions, Appius abandon'd according to their old Custom, had made Inroads by his Ar-upon the Territories of the Republic. The Roman Legions were composed wholly of Plebeians, who were Citizens in the Winter, and Soldiers in the Summer when abroad. The two Confuls divided them between them; Quintius marched against the Æqui, and Appius commanded the Army appointed against the Volsci. That General seeing himself now out of Rome, and possessed of the absolute Authority of a military Command, caused Discipline to be observed with a Severity, which the Soldiers looked upon not fo much as a necessary Regularity, as a Revenge for things past. The Rigorousness with which he used his Power irritated the whole Army. Centurions and Soldiers, all murmured at the General's Orders. A fort of Conspiracy was formed, rather D. H. 1. against his Glory than against his Life: The Soldi-9. Liv. Dec. 1. 2. ers, to hinder him from conquering and fo receiving the Honours of the Triumph, refolved by Zonaras. Flor. 1. 1. Agreement not to oppose the Enemies Enterprizes. 2. 22. Val. Max The Volsci having offered Battel, and Appius having

1. 9. c. 3. drawn his Army out of their Camp to fight them, the Romans at the Approach of the Enemy threw away their Arms, and fled shamefully, thinking they did not pay too dear for the Affront they put upon their General, if it cost them only the loss of their own Honour.

Appius in Despair runs every way to rally and bring them on again to the Fight. He intreates and threatens in vain; some get out of the way to avoid receiving his Commands; others without being in the least wounded, shew him Bandages, which they had put on purpose about the found Parts of their Body, and call out that they must be led back to the Camp to be dreft: All rush into it without waiting for Orders fo to do. The Volsci take Advantage vantage of this Confusion, and after having cut to Pieces those that sled in the Rear, they attack the Intrenchments. But then the Soldiers, fearing the Enemy might break into their Camp, sace about in the Intrenchments, make a brave Resistance, and drive back the Volsci, tho' without pursuing them, being satisfied with having shewn their General that they cou'd have conquered had they pleased.

Appius, yet more enraged at this fresh Insult, than at their Flight, was refolved next Day to affemble his Army, and place himself in his Tribunal, to make an Example of the Mutinous. But the Soldiers gave no heed to the Signal that called them to the Assembly. They loudly demanded of their Officers to be led out of the Enemy's Territories, where they must inevitably be defeated. Those Officers, finding there was neither Discipline nor Obedience left in the Army, advised the General not to hazard his Authority in a Contest with such mutinous Spirits. Appius, incensed beyond all Patience at this Revolt, broke up his Camp: But as he was in March, the Volsci, having received Intelligence of his Motions by some Deserter, with dreadful Cries fall upon his Rear. Terror flies thro the whole Army, and reaches the most advanced Bodies; every one flings away his Arms; those that bore the Enfigns abandon them: It is not now, as before, a pretended Rout. All difband, and make feveral Ways; and they do not rally again till they are arriv'd upon the Lands of the Republic.

Appius having pitched his Camp in a place that Appius cover'd the Country, and where he cou'd not be decimates constrained to fight against his Will, convenes the his Army. Assembly a second time. Being seated in his Tribunal, he upbraided the Soldiers, that stood round him, with their Cowardice, and their Treachery yet more criminal than their want of Courage. He asks one what he has done with his Arms; and those that bore the Ensigns, whether they had delivered them

them up to the Enemy. Giving full Scope to his natural Severity, which was augmented by a just Refentment of their Defertion, he decimated, that is, put every Tenth Man to death among the Soldiers, and cut off the Heads of Centurions and other Officers that had left their Posts. As the time of the Comitia for the Election of Confuls for the next Year drew near, he led back to Rome the Wreck of his Army, which entered it with the shame of Punishment in their face, and a violent thirst of Vengeance in their Hearts.

Appius gave a further Provocation to the Multitude, and incurred their Hatred anew, by the Opposition he made to the Endeavours used by the Tribunes of that Year for the Agrarian Law. Those Magistrates of the People had no sooner attained the Tribuneship, but they studied to distinguish themfelves by Propofals pleafing to the Multitude. Some invented new Laws; others refumed the Profecution of fuch as had not yet been paffed; and the Aim of all was only to share with the Senate and Patricians the Wealth, the Dignities, and the Magistracies of the Republic.

The Con-Juls fawour the the Agra-Year of Rome 283.

It was in the Confulate of L. Valerius and T. Amilius, who fucceeded in that Dignity to Quintius and Appius, that C. Sicinius, Tribune of the People, rian Law, and Grandson of the same Sicinius Bellutus that was the chief Leader of the Sedition upon the Mons Sacer, revived, in conjunction with his Colleagues, the old Difpute concerning the Partition of those Public Lands of which the Patricians and richest Inhabitants of Rome had got Possession.

The Business in a manner depended upon the D. H.l.g. Confuls, who by the Senatusconfultum made in the Consulate of Cassius and Virginius were empowered to nominate Commissioners to proceed to the Enquiry and Division of those Lands. The Tribunes had the Address to gain those two principal Magistrates of the Republic over to their Interests. Æmilius promiled to back their Pretentions: This Conful took for extraordinary extraordinary a step out of Revenge against the Senate, for having resused his Father the Honours of Triumph when he returned victorious from a War against the Equi. Valerius, on his part, was not displeased at having found an occasion of making his Peace with the People, who cou'd not forgive him the Death of Cassius, whose Accuser he had made himself during his Quæstorship.

The Tribunes having made fure of the two Confuls, brought the Affair next before the Senate. They fpoke with great Moderation, and befought that Body in the most submissive Terms, to condescend at length to do the People Justice, and that the Confuls would no longer delay naming the Decemvirs that were to regulate the Partition of the Lands. The two Consuls gave to understand by their Silence that they did not oppose it. Valerius, as first Consul, then asked the Opinion of the rest of the Senate, beginning with Æmilius the Father of his Colleague. That ancient Senator declared in favour of the Peo-D.H.Ibid. ple: He said he thought nothing cou'd be more un-ple: He said he thought nothing cou'd be more unjust than to see private Persons the only Gainers by the Spoils of the Enemy, while the rest of the Citizens laboured under Indigence and Misery. That the poor Plebeians dreaded the Thoughts of having Children, to whom they cou'd leave nothing but their own Wretchedness for an Inheritance; that instead of cultivating each the Portion of Land that belong'd to him, they were obliged to work for Subsistence like Slaves in the Estates of the Patricians; and that this servile way of Life was not very proper to form the Courage of a Roman. Thus, says that old Man, I vote that our Confuls name the Decemvirs, to proceed to the Division of these Lands, which being public and common, ought to be for the equal Benefit of All.

Appius opposed this Advice with as much Haugh-Appius optiness as if he had been a third Consul, or indeed as poses the if he had been invested with a perpetual Dictatorship. Agrarian He answered Æmilius, that the People cou'd lay the Blame

Blame of their Mifery upon nothing but their own Intemperance; that they had received their Portions of Land at the very Foundation of Rome; that oftner than once the Confuls had generously given among them the Booty won upon the Dominions of the Enemies, and that upon a thorough Enquiry it wou'd appear, that those who had received the greatest Share of those foreign Spoils were the poor-That so long as those Plebeians wallowed as they did in Debauchery and Laziness, it was not in the Power of the Republic to enrich them; that above fifteen Confulates were now past fince the Senatusconsulum had been granted for the Partition of the Lands, and in all that time not one of the preceding Magistrates had ever had a Thought of putting it in Execution, well knowing that the Senate's only Defign in fuch a Decree was to appeale the Sedition, in order to give the People more time to confider the Injustice and indeed Impossibility of their Demands; and that over and above all this, those former Confuls were not to learn, that the Senatusconfultum, was

D.H. Ibid. abolished by Prescription; and that they had more
1. 9. Prudence than to charge themselves with so important a Commission, in virtue of an Authority that was expired. That neither cou'd he believe there was the least Occasion to apprehend such an Enterprize from the Consuls then in Post, who had more Wisdom and Caution than to undertake such an Assair without the Concurrence and Authority of the Senate; But to let you see, added Appius, that in rejecting an obsolete Act, I do not mean to defend

Usurpers, I declare it as my Advice, that without making any farther Mention of the Division of the Lands, we re-unite to the public Domain the Lands of all fuch as cannot justify their Acquisition and Boundaries by legal Titles.

Notwithstanding the Equitableness of this Propofal, neither the Grandees nor the People cou'd relist an Expedient that wou'd impoverish the Rich, without any Benefit to the Poor. But however, as it utterly the Enquiry proposed against the unjust Possessions feemed a long work, most of the Senators bestowed great Praises on Appius. The Tribunes, on the con-Appius trary, enraged at finding in the single Person of this accused by Consular the Hatred and Opposition of all the Pathe Tribunes, resolved to destroy him, and for that purpose cited him before the People, as a declared Enemy of the public Liberty.

This was the ordinary Crime alledged against those that were indeed guilty of none, and were nevertheless to be destroyed. The Senate interested themfelves in this Affair as if it had been their own, looking upon Appins as the intrepid Defender of their Prerogative. Most of them were for soliciting the Multitude in his Behalf, but he opposed it with his usual Firmness and Courage. He changed neither his Habit nor his Style: and on the Day of the Affembly he appeared in the midft of his Accusers with the fame Dignity as if he had been their Judge. The Tribunes reproached him with the Severity of his Confulate, the Inhumanity with which he had put to Death a greater number of Soldiers by the hand of the Executioner, than the very Enemies had flain in the Heat of the Battel. To make that Confular still more odious, the rigorous Conduct of his Father was called to mind, as a Crime in the Son: But he answered these several Articles with so much Strength, that the People aftonished and confounded durst not condemn him. The Tribunes, fearing he wou'd be acquitted, adjourned the Sentence to another Affembly, pretending the Day was fo far fpent that they shou'd not have time to collect the Suffrages. During these Delays, Appius, plainly forefeeing he shou'd at length be facrificed to the im- D.H.I.g. placable Hatred of those Magistrates, voluntarily put an end to his own Life. His Son caused his Appius Body to be brought into the Forum, and according puts an to Custom presented himself to make his Funeral end to his Oration; but the Tribunes, who were refolved to orun Life, perfecute persecute his very Memory, offered to oppose it, alledging that his Father was to be reckoned among Criminals, not having been acquitted of his Accusation before his Death. But the People, more generous, removed their Opposition, and heard with Pleasure the Praises of an Enemy whom they cou'd never help esteeming, and hated no longer.

The Tribunes afterwards refumed the Business of the Agrarian Law, which Appius's Profecution had only suspended. The Death of that great Man, one wou'd think, shou'd have deterred all others from opposing the Publication of the Law; but as the Fortune of most of the Senators depended upon it, and feveral rich Plebeians had also acquired different Parcels of those public Lands, the Party of the Patricians gathered Strength; that of the People grew weaker and weaker; this cooled the Zeal of the Tri-The Agra-bunes; and the Proprietors still continued in Posses-dropt.

Year of Rome 284.

rian Law sion of these Lands, notwithstanding the Pretensions and Complaints of the common People. The Romans, the following Year, under the Consulate of Aulus Virginius and T. Numicius, were employed in Wars, or rather Inroads and Incursions upon the Æqui, the Volsci and the Sabines; but at the Conclufion of the Campaign the old Divisions were renewed.

> The Multitude, who looked upon themselves to be over-power'd by the Credit of the Great, to shew their Refentment, absented themselves from all the Affemblies that were held by Centuries, and where the Confuls and Senate perfided. It feemed as if the Plebeians intended to separate themselves once more from the Body of the Republic: None of them appeared at the Election of Confuls for the next Year; and, which was never known before, T. Quintius and 2. Servilius were raised to that Dignity by the sole Voices of the Senate, the Patricians and their Clients, who notwithstanding all these Divisions constantly adhered to the Party of their Patrons.

These two Consuls, to prevent the Breach from growing wider, busied the People all that Year in various

Year of Rome 285.

various Wars against the Aqui and Volsci. T. Quintius took from these latter the City of Antium and its whole Territory. The Plunder and Booty somewhat appealed the Minds of the Multitude, and the Soldier at his Return to Rome knew not how to complain of Generals under whom he had acquired both Wealth and Glory.

I,

Ing

a-

eth

d

of

ad ne

m

he

it,

nt

a-

W ri-

ef-

ns o-

of

in

he u-

d.

to

he re he re P-

r; ole ts,

ly

m in us

But their Complaints and Diffentions began afresh in the Consulate of Tib. Amilius and Q. Fabius. We have already heard that Æmilius in his first Confulate had declared for the Partition of the Lands; the Tribunes and Promoters of the Agrarian Law assumed new Hopes under his second Consulate: The Affair was debated in the Senate: Æmilius had not changed his Mind. That Conful, ever favourable to the People, averred, that it was impossible to maintain Peace and Union among the Citizens of a free State, unless the Laws kept some Proportion between the Condition of the Poor and that of the Rich, and made an equal Division among them of the Lands Difficulty conquered from the Enemy. But this Partition, fo in executadvantageous to the Plebeians, laboured under great ing the Difficulties. It was necessary, in order to it, to diflinguish between the original Patrimony of every private Man, and what he had added to it from the public Lands. This Diffinction must even extend between fuch Parcels as the Patricians had really purchased of the public Domain, and such as they had at first only taken as Farms in their own or borrowed Names, and afterwards mingled and confounded together with part of the Commons, in their rightful Patrimony. A long Prescription concealed from the most strict Enquiry the Knowledge of these several Usurpations. The Patricians had afterwards shared out these Lands among their Children for their Patrimony, and those Patrimonies now grown Hereditary, were passed thro various Families by Succession or Purchase. Nay, some rich Plebeians posfessed Part of them, which they had honestly bought;

1.1.8.

Antium.

fo that there feemed to be no way to touch upon this Affair, without occasioning a general Confusion in the Republic.

Æmilius, without any regard to Inconveniences fo well worth Confideration, still obstinately infifted upon the Publication of the Law. He was very defirous of making it his Merit with the People, that it was pass'd during his Consulate; and he was seconded by some ancient Senators, who looked upon the Mediocrity of the Fortune of private Persons and Equality of Wealth to be the strongest Supports of the public Liberty. But the Majority and especially those that were in Possession of those public Lands, complained that Amilius, in order to make his court to the People, was for being liberal to them with Liv. Dec. the Wealth of the Nobility. The Dispute ran even into Invectives and Abuses; many reproached him that he acted not fo much like a Conful as a feditious Tribune: And, which is most wonderful, even Senators were feen to be wanting of Respect to the Head of the Senate, and the Sovereign Magistrate of the Republic. Fabius, his Colleague, to prevent the Confequences of these Divisions, thought of an Expedient which displeased neither Party.

Most of the Inhabitants of the City of Antium Liv. Dec. were perished in the last War. Fabius, to mollify Colonies of the Roman People, whose Misery and the seditious Speeches of their Tribunes had now made them furious, proposed to fend Part of the poorest Citizens of Rome by way of Colony to Antium, and to divide among them fome adjoining Lands which had been This Advice was at first retaken from the Volsci. ceived with great Applause by the meaner Sort of People, who are always greedy of Novelties. Quintius, A. Virginius, and P. Furius were immediately named, to make the Establishment of this Colony. But when the Plebeians were to give their Names to those Triumvirs, few of them appeared.

Rome had too many Charms to detain its Inhabitants; no Body cared for leaving it. The Games, the II.

his

in fo

pefi-

it

nd-

the ind

of

lly

ds.

urt

ith ven

im

ous

Se-

the ate

ent an um

ify

ous

fu-

ens

ide

een

re-

of

T.

ne-

his eir ed.

bies,

he

the Spectacles, the public Assemblies, the Hurry of Business, the Share the People had in the Government, every thing contributed to tie the Citizens to their old Abode, let their Poverty be ever fo great. A Colony was looked upon to be no better than an honourable kind of Banishment; and the most wretched Plebeians rather chose to live in Rome in Indigence, and in Expectation of the uncertain Division of the public Lands, which they had been fo long flattered with hopes of, than to be actually in Poffeffion of good Land in a rich Colony; fo that the Triumvirs, to make up the Number appointed for the Colony, were forced to admit of Strangers and Strag- D. H.1. q. lers that offered themselves to gain a Habitation in The only Advantage they drew from this Settlement, was, that those among the People who had refused to go, cou'd not for shame meddle any more in the Affair of the Partition of the Lands.

A dreadful Pestilence laid both the City and Coun- Orof. 1. try desolate about this time. An infinite Number 11. c. 12. of People, feveral Senators, and the two Confuls Year of themselves, P. Servilius and L. Æbutius, died of Rome it. The Volsei and Ægui imagining they might 290. The Volsci and Æqui, imagining they might get great Advantages over the Romans, if they attacked them in this weak Condition, renewed the War under the Consulate of L. Lucretius Tricipitinus Year of and T. Veturius Geminus. These two Magistrates Rome were no fooner raised to that Dignity, but they pre-291. pared to repel the Incursions of the Enemies. as they cou'd not raise any great Forces in a City where the plague had just made such terrible Devaflation, they called to their Aid the Latins and Hernici, Allies of the Roman Nation. They put them-Liv. 1. 3. felves at their Head, and fought fo bravely, that the Enemy was defeated in three feveral Battels.

End of the Third Book.

THE

HISTORY

OF THE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OFTHE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK IV.

The Tribune C. TERENTILLUS ARSA makes a Proposal for drawing up and settling, with the People's Consent, a Body of Laws to serve as a Rule in the Administration of Justice. Ceso, for opposing it, is forc'd to fly into Tuscany to avoid the Judgment of the People. The Tribunes form a Design to ruin fuch of the Senators and Patricians as were obnoxious to them. The Consul Claudius disappoints them. Appius Herdonius seizes the Capitol. tack'd by the Romans, and oblig'd to kill bimself. Q. Cincinnatus is fetch'd from the Plough to command the Armies in Quality of Consul. He refuses to be Conful a second time, and returns to his Plough. He is recall'd, to go in Quality of Distator, and deliver one of the Consuls who was shut up by the Enemy, with his whole Army. He delivers the Conful and and his Soldiers, beats the Enemy, and returns Triumphant into Rome. Q. Ceso his Son is recalled from Banishment. The Senate grants the People a Power to chuse ten Tribunes instead of sive, provided they drop the Projest of the Terentillian Law.

Mount Aventine yielded up to the People by a Senatusconsultum. The Consuls, T. Romilius and
C. Veturius, obtain a compleat Victory over the Enemy. The People, by the Persuasion of Siccius, resuse them the Honour of a Triumph, and even condemn them in a Fine, because they opposed the Publication of the Agrarian Law.

HILE the two Confuls were in the Field. a certain Tribune of the People nam'd C. Terentillus Arsa, undertook to signalize his Accession to the Tribunate by advancing new Proposals. This Man having observ'd that the Senate and Confuls obstructed from time to time, by their Authority, the Publication of most of the Laws propos'd by his Colleagues, bufy'd his Thoughts how to weaken and reduce a Power that was a perpetual Object of Envy and Emulation to The Tribunes. He therefore demanded in full Affembly, that Bounds shou'd be set to the absolute Authority of the Confuls; and that at the same time, Ter. Arfa with the People's Confent, there shou'd be an Esta-proposes blishment of Laws fix'd and determin'd for the Se- an Estanate to be govern'd by in the Judgments they shou'd blisoment pass between Man and Man. Larus.

In order to judge of the Importance of this fecond D. H. I. Proposal, it may not be amiss to observe here that io. Rome as yet had no Laws, nor any constant Form of administring Justice. The sole Will of her late How Ju-Kings was instead of a Law all the Time they reign-fice was ed. As the Consuls and Senate succeeded to the Re-anciently gal Power, they likewise succeeded to the same su-dispensed preme Right of distributing Justice, and regulated Romans, their Sentences either by the Principles of natural Equity, or ancient Usages; or else by the first Laws of Romulus and his Successors, some slight Footsteps whereof were still to be found in the facred Books which were lodg'd with the Patricians alone. The People knew but little of the matter: most of them being employ'd abroad in the Wars, or else settled in the Country, rarely came to Town but on Market Days about their domestic Concerns, or to be prefent at the Comitia and other public Assemblies, which were holden only on those Days. They referr'd all their Differences to the Judgment of the Confuls, who always made a Mystery to the People of those first Elements of their Juris-Prudence.

P 4

The Death of a great Number of Patricians, who had been swept away by the Plague, and the Abfence of the two Confuls who were actually at the Head of the Armies, feem'd to be a favourable Conjuncture for TERENTILLUS to make an Innovation in the Government, He represented to the People, gues against the Great.

Dec. 1.

lus baran the Patrician Magistrates were absolute Masters of each Man's Fortune; that whenever any Contest arose between a Patrician and a Plebeian, the latter was fure to come by the worst; that besides losing his Caufe, he had not fo much as the Confolation of knowing whether he had Right or Wrong done him; and he concluded with moving for an immediate Establishment of Laws, known by every Body, to ferve for a Rule to the Magistrates in their Sentences, and to the Litigants for Proofs of the Justice or Injustice of their Cause.

He afterwards fell to railing against the Confuls: That their Authority was insupportable in a free Ci-Liv. 1. 3. ty; that the ancient Kings of Rome enjoy'd not a greater share of Power; that, like those Princes, the Confuls had their Robes border'd with Purple, their Curule or Ivory Chair; as also Guards and Lictors. to attend them. That at home they were the Difpenfers of Justice, and that those Magistrates, at the fame time that they thought themselves above the Laws, avenged the Infringement of them in their Inferiors and the common People with the most cruel Punishments.

Punishments. That abroad and at the Head of the Armies they always made War with an absolute Authority, and even Peace, not feldom, without fo much as confulting the Senate, to whom indeed for form fake they wou'd afterwards give an account of their Administration. That thus they had the whole Authority of Kings, and only wanted the Name. But that to prevent their Domination from degenerating at length into a perpetual Tyranny, he demanded that a Choice shou'd be made of five of the best Men of the Republic, who should be authoriz'd to restrain within due Bounds a Power so excessive; so that the Confuls, for the future, might have no other Authority over their Fellow Citizens, but what those very Citizens shou'd think fit to entrust them with.

The Senators were all furpris'd and ftartled at fuch bold Proposals: They then found, tho' too late, the truth of what the two Appius's had so many times foretold 'em, that the People, after experiencing the Weakness of the Senate by so many Laws extorted from them, wou'd at length openly attack their Authority thro' the Sides of the Consuls, who were the chief Support of it. Luckily for that Body, 2, Fa-Tit. Liv. bius in the absence of the Consuls was at that time! 3. Governor of Rome. He was of Consular Dignity, D. H. I. of an intrepid Spirit, full of Courage and Resolution, and an inviolable Adherent to the Laws and Constitution of the Republic.

This ftout Magistrate finding the Consular Dig-Opposition nity in danger of being ruin'd by that enterprizing made by Tribune, dispatch'd away different Messengers privately to the two Consuls, with notice of what had offer'd, and to conjure them to hasten back to Rome with all Expedition. He then convened the Senate, and represented that till then the Romans in judicial Matters had contented themselves with the Custom of going according to natural Right, and the sole Principles of Equity and good Sense. That Multiplicity of Laws serv'd only to cloud the Truth of Things;

Things; adding, that he forefaw, with Grief, all the Misfortunes that wou'd befal the Republic from this judiciary Form endeavour'd at by TERENTIL-Lus. He afterwards infinuated with much Smoothness, that even tho' fuch Changes might be thought necessary, it was neither honourable nor just in the Citizens at home, to proceed to a Decision in the Absence of the two Consuls, and of such part of the People who compos'd their Armies. That when they return'd home they might justly refent the hurrying of an Affair of fuch confequence, which as it affected each particular Man, ought not to have been determined but in a general Affembly of the whole Roman People. That the Confuls, as Chiefs of the Republic, wou'd protest against whatever shou'd be decreed without their Privity; whereas fo foon as ever those two supreme Magistrates appear'd in the Senate, and the whole People were got together, fuch Measures might be concerted as shou'd be most fuitable to the Good of the State, and the Welfare of the Republic. Fabius then inveighed with great Vehemence against the Author of these new Propofals. He faid, that TERENTILLUS took advantage of the Absence of the Consuls to attack the Republic; and if the Year before, while the Plague and a War laid waste the City of Rome and its Territory, the Gods in their Wrath had permitted that feditious Tribune to be in Office, the Commonwealth wou'd never have been able to have stood against such severe Scourges, and that then TERENTILLUS wou'd infallibly have come at the Head of the Æqui and Volsci and destroyed Rome, or at least have changed the Form of its Government, tho' founded by their Ancestors under fuch happy Auspices. Then softning his Style a little, he address'd his Speech to the other Tribunes, and conjured them by the Safety of their Country to make no Innovation till the return of the Confuls.

The greater part of the Tribunes, overcome by his Intreaties and the Solidity of his Reasons, insisted no longer on the first Demand of TERENTILLUS concerning the Limitation of the Confuls Power. Or perhaps the true Cause why they wav'd the Defign of leffening the Confular Authority, was their hopes of rifing some time or other to that Post themfelves. But they perfifted in demanding a Choice to be made from among the Senators and Plebeians of proper Persons, to compose and form a Body of Laws, for determining Suits among the Citizens. However, upon the Instances of Fabius they confented to suspend the Prosecution of that Affair, and the Confuls at their return found the City quiet; but this Tranquility continued not long. The Hernici. who at that time were in Alliance with the Roman People, gave Intelligence that their Neighbours the Agui and Volsci were secretly arming, and that the new Colony of Antium was enter'd into that Confe-We have before related, that for want of a fufficient Number of Roman Citizens willing to fettle in that Colony, it was fill'd with People pickt up from different Parts, Latins, Hernici, and Tuscans; some Volscians too had stoln in among 'em. As these Adventurers out-number'd the Romans, they had a Majority in the Council. They carried on a private Correspondence with the Enemies of Rome; and tho' they had not as yet declar'd openly against the Republic, their Fidelity began to be suspected.

Mean while the Senate, to be provided against Tumults any Surprize, order'd the two Consuls forthwith to raised by raise Forces: This raising of Forces was call'd a-the Trimong the Romans, making a Choice, because the bunes. Citizens being all Soldiers, the Consuls in case of a War had a Power to chuse such as they thought proper for the Service. These two Magistrates having caused their Tribunal to be erected in the Forum, cited such as they had pitcht upon for the War. But the Tribunes withstood them, and reviv'd the Proposals of Terentillus for the compiling a Body of Laws; and Virginius, the most cholerick cholerick of the Tribunes, bawl'd out in the Forum, that this pretended War was nothing but a Trick of the Senate to draw the People out of Rome, and fo hinder 'em from giving their Votes in an Affair that so nearly concern'd every Individual.

The Contest ran high, and gave Birth to fresh Commotions. There was no longer feen either Obedience in the People, or Authority in the Confu's. Every thing was carry'd by meer Violence: And those supreme Magistrates having caused to be arrested a certain Plebeian who refus'd to go to the War, the Tribunes rescued him out of the Lictor's Hands, and fet him at Liberty. The Confuls fearing to expose their Characters to greater Indignities, quitted the Forum and went their ways home, where they remained for fome Days without once appearing at those tumultuous Assemblies (wherein such had most Authority as cou'd make most Noise) efpecially after it was known that the Intelligence of the Hernici was without grounds, and no fuch thing as an Enemy stirring. The People's Ears were now dinn'd with the absolute necessity of obliging the Confuls to regulate their Judgments by a Body of Laws to be publisht and made Notorious to every Man. But the Senate, under pretence of preferving their ancient Usages, cou'd not be brought to part with that Custom of giving Judgment arbitrarily.

Year of Rome 292. Prodigies ; their Ef. feas.

This Year there were violent Earthquakes, and fiery Exhalations were feen in the Air. These Phenomena, purely natural, but which however were by the Vulgar lookt upon as Forerunners of new Calamities, superfeded this Affair for some time. Every one was full of finister Presages, which Superstition and Fear helpt to multiply. Some had feen Apparitions shifting each Moment into a thoufand Forms; others had heard supernatural Voices in the Night time. There are Eminent Historians

Liv. 1. 3. who have not demurr'd to report upon the Veraci-D. H. 1. ty of these Visionaries, that it rain'd raw Flesh, and 10. that while it was falling down piece-meal like

Snow,

Snow, Birds of Prey caught it in the Air with their Talons. Recourse was presently had to the Oracles; the Books of the Sybils were consulted. The Depositaries of those facred Books, all Patricians, gave out that Rome was threatned with a Siege, by fome formidable Power, that wou'd take advantage of its intestine Divisions. This Prediction seem'd to be Copy'd after what had lately happen'd in the Case of Coriolanus's Enterprise. And the Tribunes probably suspected the Priests had model'd their Answer by the Views and Interests of the Senate. But on the contrary, the Populace, who thought what had been, might be, and who dreaded to fee a second Coriolanus at the Gates of Rome, oblig'd their Tribunes to have a Conference with the Senate, in order to contrive some way or other to put an end to their Contentions. Several Meetings were had, but all to no purpose. Neither of the Parties wou'd bate any thing of its Pretentions. At The Law length, Time having dispell'd that Terror which again prothe Priests had endeavoured to infuse into the Peo-posed, ple, the Tribunes affembled anew, and without confulting the Senate, presented to the Multitude a more explicite Draught of the Terentillian Law. importing, that the People shou'd instantly nominate five Commissioners to be chosen among the wifeft and most intelligent of the Senate. That the faid Commissioners should be empower'd to collect together, and put into Form, a Body of Civil Laws, as well in respect to publick Affairs, as private Differences that might arise between Man and Man. That they shou'd make their Report in an Affembly of the People, and post it up in the Forum Romanum, to the end that each individual Citizen might be apprized of the same, and enabled to give his Opinion thereof. The Tribunes having open'd this Project, declar'd, they would defer the Publication of it to the third Market Day, with intent that fuch as shou'd happen to be of contrary Sentiments.

timents, might freely lay before the People the Reafons of their Opposition.

Opposition of the Senate.

Many of the Senators began to exclaim against this new Proposal. It occasion'd a world of Difputes, without coming to any Iffue. At length the Tribunes resolved to carry their Point by Force. They accordingly conven'd another Affembly, wherein the whole Senate appear'd. The Heads of that Body urg'd to the People in spite of the Tribunes, that it was a thing unheard of, that without a Senatusconfultum, without taking the Auspices, and without confulting either the Gods or the prime Men of the Republic, a part of the Citizens, even the most inconsiderable part, shou'd pretend to make Laws for all the Orders of the State. They inculcated their Reasons into such of the Plebeians as feem'd to be most rational. On the contrary, the Dregs of the Populace, prejudic'd by their Tribunes, with great Noise demanded the Ballot; but the youngest of the Senators, and the Patricians, quash'd the whole Project. QUINTIUS CESO, Son of Quintius Cincinnatus, a Consular, was at the Head of 'em; he rushes into the Crowd, he knocks down or disperfes all that were in his way; and by means of this Uproar, which he rais'd on purpose, he breaks off the Affembly, in spite of all that the Tribunes could do to keep them together,

Year of Rome 292. Ceso's violent Bebaviour.

The Senators and Patricians bestow'd on Ceso large Encomiums, which only serv'd to heighten his Presumption and his Rancour towards the Populace. He was a young Man, of an agreeable Figure, well shap'd, and had an extraordinary Strength of Body; by Nature proud, daring, and intrepid: He knew not what it was to fear, and had already signaliz'd himself by an uncommon Bravery in Battel. As he was no less an Orator than a Soldier, and was always the forwardest to answer the seditious Harangues of the Tribunes, those Magistrates, enraged to find in one single Man the Vigor of all the Patricians, conspir'd his Ruin. After they had agreed among

mong themselves upon Articles of Impeachment, A. Virginius caus'd him to be summon'd before the Affembly of the People.

So long as Crso was in the Warmth of a Debate, Cefo acfupported by the Senate, who flattered his Vanity with their Applauses, he made show of great Resolution and Firmness. But his Courage sail'd him at the Approach of his Trial; and the Example of Coriolanus made a strong Impression in his Mind. He is now timorous, he is frighted, he repents of what is past, dreads what is to come, and, like a base Coward, almost resolves to desert his Party. He put on mourning Habit, and with a Countenance full of Sorrow and Humiliation, he went about, sneakingly begging the Favour of the meanest Plebeian.

The Day that his Affair was to come on, he had not the Resolution so much as to shew his Face to the People. His Father, accompanied by his Relations and Friends, was fain to appear for him. A. Virginius open'd his Accusation with Reflections upon CESO's imperious Temper, his want of Respect for the Assemblies of the People, and the Outrages he had committed upon private Persons. ' And what will become of our Liberty, cry'd Virginius, when the Patricians shall have advanc'd to the Confulate this young ambitious Man, who now in his private Capacity already causes just Alarms to his Country, by his violent and audacious Deeds?' He then produc'd all the Plebeians who had been injur'd by CESO, and who demanded Juftice. His Relations and Friends, instead of going about to clear him of those pretended Violences, only answer'd the Tribunes Invectives with praising the Accused. Some recounted all the Battels where- Ceso dein he had diftinguished himself; others named the fended. feveral Citizens whose Lives he had preserved in those Battels; T. Quintius Capitolinus, who had been thrice Conful, faid he had carried him to the War with him; that he had often feen him in fingle Combat vanguish the bravest of the Enemy, and that he always look'd on him as the prime Soldier of the Army. Lucretius, who had been Conful the preceding Year, added, that it was for the Interest of the Republic to preserve so compleat a Citizen; and that Age, by increasing his Wisdom, wou'd every Day take off from that impetuous Character which render'd him odious to the Multitude.

with

Liv. 1. 3. C. 12.

L. Quintius Cincinnatus, his Father, a Man the most esteem'd of any of his Age for his Capacity in D.H.l.10. governing the State, and commanding the Armies, only begg'd the People to grant a Son to a Father that had never wrong'd any Citizen. The Respect and Veneration that was had for that illustrious old Man began to work upon the Multitude. But Virginius, who was bent upon Cefo's Ruin, answer'd Cincinnatus, that his Son was the more guilty, in as much as he neglected to improve by the Example of fuch a Father. That he nourish'd in his House the Tyrant of his Country, and that the bright Pattern of his Ancestors shou'd have taught him to prize the public Liberty above his own Children,

> After all, faid that Tribune, turning to the · People, that it may not be thought I have any fi-

> " nifter Views, I freely confent, if you will, to wave the injurious Speeches Cefo has made in our Affem> blies against the People; as also the Violences he has exercis'd upon better Men than himself. But P > beg that my Colleague, M. Volscius, be heard in what he has to offer by way of private Complaint against him; and I hope the People will not leave unaveng'd one of their own Magistrates that has been fo great a Sufferer by him.

Volicius's Sation of Ceso.

Then Volscius ascending the Rostrum, to act the falfe Accu- Part that had been before concerted between them. · I cou'd have wish'd, faid he, directing his Speech to the People, it had been in my Power fooner to have brought my Complaints for the Death of a most dear Brother whom Cefo kill'd in my Arms. · But the customary Violences of this Cefo, together with the Interest and Credit of his Family, made me but too fenfible what I had myfelf to fear from fuch a Profecution. If I come too late to be his · Accuser, you cannot but give the hearing at least to the fad Testimony I bear of his Cruelty and ' Tyranny. It was, continu'd that Hypocrite, under the Consulate of L. Ebutius and P. Servilius. returning home one Evening, my Brother and I. from a Friend's House where we had supp'd, we " met hard by the public Stews Cefo, full of Wine, and accompany'd, according to his Custom, with · feveral young Patricians infolent as himfelf, and who, belike, had been making a Debauch together in those Houses of Prostitution. They at first · attack'd us with abusive Language, which I indeed was for taking no notice of. But my Brother, less · patient than myself, answering them as a Man that is Free and of a Spirit wou'd do, Caso instantly · fell upon him, and being much the stronger Man, he fo bruis'd him with his Fifts and his Feet, that he expir'd upon the Spot, notwithstanding my · Prayers and Intreaties, which were the only Weaons I had. I cou'd not carry my Complaints to the Confuls, they dying the same Year of the · Plague. L. Lucretius and T. Veturius, their Suc-· ceffors, were long time in the Field; till they return'd I cou'd not think of forming my Action. · But Ceso hearing of my Defign, came upon me one Night unawares in a by-place, and striking me down, repeated his Blows fo, that to avoid my · Brother's Fate, I was forc'd to promise him never to mention what had befal'n either of us.

Book IV. in the ROMAN REPUBLIC.

The People were so exasperated at this Story, that, without examining into the Truth of the Fact, they were going immediately to condemn Ceso to die; but A. Virginius, who was the Manager of this whole Villany, thought fit to cloath it with the Appearance of Justice; and to destroy the Accused according to the ordinary Forms. He required that since Volscius had not his Witnesses at hand, Ceso should self.

Cefo ba-

shou'd be secur'd and imprison'd till such time as his Crime cou'd be prov'd. T. Quintius, his Kinsman, represented, that it was a thing unheard of in a Republic, that upon a bare Charge, a Citizen that was perhaps innocent shou'd be immediately arrested and carried to Jail; and that this new Method of Procedure wou'd strike at the public Liberty. But the Tribune maintain'd, that such a Precaution was neceffary, in order to prevent fo great an Offender from escaping the Justice of the People. The Question was debated with much Intemperance of Speech on both fides. In the end, 'twas concluded, that the Party accused shou'd remain in Liberty, but that withal, ten Citizens shou'd be bound for his forthcoming on the Day he was to be try'd, or elfe pay fuch Fine as shou'd be agreed upon between the Tribunes and Senate. Cefo, tho' innocent, durst not nishes him-trust himself to the Judgment of the People, but departing Rome that very Night, went and took shelter in Tuscany. The Tribunes hearing of his Flight, exacted the Fine with fo much Rigor and Severity, that Quintius, the Father of Cefo, after having fold best part of his Estate, was forc'd to banish himself to a poor Hovel on t'other side the Tyber: And that illustrious Consular was oblig'd with his own Hands to cultivate five or fix Acres of Land, which were all he then had to live upon, and which have fince gone by his Name, the Quintian Meadows. D.H.1.10.

Ceso being now in Exile, the two Tribunes thought the Senate must truckle to them, and flattered themfelves with hopes of feeing the Law forthwith establish'd; but as it was an Affair that concern'd almost all the Great, the Nobility united themselves more closely together after the Difgrace of the Son of Quintius: And no sooner was the Scheme of a Body of Laws mentioned, but there forung up as it were a thousand Ceso's, all opposing it with the same Intrepidity. The time being come for chusing new Confuls, the Senate and Patricians in Conjunction, procur'd that Dignity to fall on C. Claudius, Brother of

Appius

Appius that dy'd; and this they did because he was stanch in the Interest of his Uncle; without partaking any thing of his rugged Temper. They affign'd him for Colleague P. Valerius, who having once before been Consul, was therefore nam'd first Consul in this Election.

The Tribunes plainly faw by this Combination Tribunes of the whole Nobility, that even tho' they shou'd conspire aevery Year destroy one or other of the Patricians by gainst the different Acculations, they wou'd never get the bet- Year of ter of a Body wherein there was no less Harmony Rome than Power. Therefore without amufing themselves 293. in profecuting judicially fuch of the Patricians as fignaliz'd themselves by opposing the Law, they secretly form'd the execrable Defign of destroying at one Stroke the better Part of the Senate, and involving in their Ruin all fuch Patricians who were obnoxious to them, or suspected by them, on account either of their Wealth or Interest. In order to effect fo detestable a Project, their Emissaries were sent about to whisper among the Rabble, as if some great Defign was fecretly hatching against their Liberty. Such flying Reports passing from Mouth to Mouth, were every time fwell'd with fome additional Circumstance more and more dreadful, and which in the end fill'd the whole City with Inquietude, Trouble and Distrust

The Tribunes seeing the People's Minds prejudic'd, and in such a Ferment as was proper to receive any Impression, contriv'd a Letter to be deliver'd to themselves in public. While they were sitting in D.H.1.16, their Tribunal, a Stranger comes, and in sight of all the People presents them a Letter, and was gone again in an instant, and vanish'd among the Crowd. The Tribunes lay their Heads together, and read it to themselves; and tho' they knew well enough beforehand every word it contain'd, yet did they affect to be astonish'd, and put on an Air of Surprize, the better to stir up the Curiosity of the People, and make them more uneasy. Then rising from their

Seats,

Seats, and having caus'd Silence to be proclaim'd by the Herald, Virginius addressing himself to the Affembly, 'The Roman People, says he with Looks full of Consternation, is threaten'd with the most dreadful Calamity that can possibly befal them:

And if the Gods, who are Protectors of Innocence,

'had not discover'd the wicked Designs of our Ene-'mies, we had been all lost.' He added, that he must first make the Consuls acquainted with the thing, and afterwards he wou'd give them an account of what shou'd be refolv'd on by the Senate.

While these Magistrates were gone to wait on the Confuls, their Emissaries, who had spread themselves up and down among the Affembly, put about various Reports, all tending to make the Patricians more odious to the Multitude. Some faid in general, that for some time past there had been but too-much Reafon to suspect some dangerous Plot was contriving against the People's Liberty; others, as if they knew more of the matter, affirm'd that the Agui and Volsei, in Conjunction with the Patricians, were to put Ceso at their Head, like another Coriolanus; and that with their Affistance he was to return again to Rome to revenge himself on his Enemies, abolish the Tribuneship, and restore the Government to its ancient Foundation; and that afterwards the Towns and Lands which had been taken from the Æqui and Volsei, were to be given 'em again as a Reward for their Services: Some further affirm'd, that Cefo was not gone out of Rome: That they had been told he was conceal'd by one of the Confuls; that his Purpose was to affaffinate the Tribunes some Night in their Beds. That all the young Patricians were concerned in this Plot; and that the Letter just now deliver'd into the Hands of the Tribunes, doubtless contain'd Advice and Proofs of it. In short, these Creatures of the Tribunes made it their Bufiness to talk difmally about this mysterious Letter, with intent to keep up the People's Prejudice, and increase the Hatred they bore the Senate and Patricians. The

The Tribunes being arriv'd at the Senate, Virgimius, who was Spokesman, addressing himself to the Confuls and Senators, ' For a confiderable time. · Confcript Fathers, faid he, there have been ftrange Rumours in this City of a Plot upon the Liberty of the People. But as they were without Vouchers, we looked upon them as empty Stories begot by · Fear and Idleness. Since that Time, we have received Intimations that are fomewhat coherent, and cloathed with better Circumstances; but as these · likewife were without Voucher, or any Author's Name, we did not think them deferving enough of your Notice, and therefore forebore to report them to you: At the fame time, that nothing · might be left undone in an Affair of this Confequence, we caus'd Enquiry to be made privately; whereby we came at sufficient Tokens of a Plot, tho' we could not discover the Object thereof, nor who were at the Head of it, or otherwise engag'd in it. At length, not above two Hours ago, we are let into this dangerous Secret. A Letter we ' just now received, as we were sitting in our Tribunal, informs us that there is a Conspiracy, and fets forth the Design of the Conspirators. first Tokens which as I told ye we had come at, concur exactly with the Intelligence contain'd in this Letter. In fo imminent a Danger, wherein to lose time in deliberating how to punish this · Crime, wou'd be almost as bad as the Crime itfelf, we haftened, as in Duty bound, to come and give you Information of it, and to lay before 4 you fuch things as will make your Ears tingle to · hear. Be it known to you, Conscript Fathers, we have received a Letter which advises us of Perfons of the highest Rank, Senators and Knights, too many to be now particularly named, that have resolved absolutely to abolish the Tribunate, and all the Rights and Privileges of the People.

That to compass such detestable Designs, they have agreed that Ceso Quintius, at the Head of a Body of Equi and Volsci, shall clandestinely and by Night come to such a Gate of the City, which his Accomplices are to keep open for him; that he shall be introduced without Noise into the City; and that the principal Conspirators, divided into different Parties, and advantaged by the Darkness, shall go and fall upon the Tribunes unawares in their Houses, and that at the very same time all our Throats were to be cut, together with the principal of the People, and such as in the Assemblies were wont to express most Zeal for the Defence of Liberty,

We conjure you, Conscript Fathers, not to give us up to the Rage of these Blood-hounds. In order to prevent their evil Designs, we hope you will not refuse us a Senatusconfultum, impowering us to inform our selves of this Conspiracy, and to secure the Ring-leaders thereof. It is highly reasonable that the Magistrates of the People take cognizance by themselves of what concerns the Welfare of the People, and that such a Decree as we demand be immediately granted, without wasting time, as is too often the Case in formal Speeches and putting of Questions: The least Delay were dangerous: Who knows but this very Night may dangerous: Who knows but this very Night may be pitch'd upon for the Execution of this bloody Defign? To conclude, they must be Conspirators themselves that are against enquiring into the Confpiracy.

There was not a Senator but detested such an Attempt; they were however divided as to the Answer they should make to Virginius. The more timorous were apprehensive that a Resusal wou'd irritate the People, and raise a Sedition. But those, on the contrary, who were of a firmer Character, represented that it was no less dangerous to grant the Tribunes a Senatusconsultum, than to put Arms in the Hands of raging Madmen, who wou'd immediately employ them against the chief of the Senate.

nate. In this diversity of Opinions, C. Claudius, C. Clauone of the Confuls, arose, and addressing himself to dius vigo-Virginius, declar'd that he did not oppose the En-rously opquiry which he demanded; that he even confented Tribunes. the Plebeian Magistrates shou'd be the Inquisitors; but that first of all he was for examining whether the Conspiracy were real and undeniable: ' Let us therefore, fays he to him, fee who fent that myfterious Letter which you receiv'd in your Tribu-' nal, and who are the Senators and Knights named • in it. Why do not you name them your felf? Surely we have time enough to hear the Names of those great Criminals. Why did you not at least · lay hold of the Bearer of an anonymous Letter, that contained fo foul an Accusation against the · Principal Men in the Republic? I am no less furoprised, that you have not made us sensible of the wonderful Concurrence there is between the Circumstances, which at first made you suspect some · Conspiracy to be on foot, and the Letter which acquaints you with the Heads and Accomplices of Is it possible you cou'd imagine the Senate wou'd deliver over our most illustrious Citizens to your Fury, upon the bare Credit of a Letter defitute of all manner of Proofs?

Yes, Conscript Fathers, the Tribunes flatter'd themselves you would do this; and the Easiness with which you have lately suffered us to be robbed of Ceso, made those seditious Magistrates entertain a Notion, that under so weak a Government, they might venture at any thing. This is the bottom of this Chymerical Conspiracy with which they thought to frighten us; and if the State had reason to apprehend any Danger, it is only from these Wheedlers of the People, who tho ty are indeed its Enemies.

This Discourse pronounced resolutely by a Conful, whose Penetration and Probity were acknowledged by all, quite cast down the Courage of the Q 4 Tribunes.

they fet up for the Defenders of the Public Liber-

Tribunes. They went out from the Senate with no less Shame than Indignation. The People were waiting for them: They repaired to the Assembly, where they inveighed equally against the Conful, and against the whole Senate.

But C. Claudius following them; he mounted the Rollrum first. Arm'd with that Confidence which flows from Truth, he exprest himself to the People in the fame manner he had just done to the Senate, and fooke with fo much Strength and Eloquence. that the better fort among the People were convinced, that this private Scheme of a Conspiracy, about which the Tribunes made fo much noise, was only an Artifice invented by themselves, to have it in their Power to destroy their Enemies. None but the Rabble perfifted in believing the Reality of this imaginary Conspiracy, which helped to nourish their Hatred against the Patricians: And the Tribunes carefully maintained them in an Error, which gave them an Opportunity of shewing their own Zeal.

Year of Rome 293. D. H. 1. 10. Liv. 3. C. 15. Herdoniprize.

In a Government fo full of Troubles and Commotions, Rome was upon the brink of falling under a Foreign Yoke. A private Sabine formed a Defign fo daring; his Name was Appius Herdonius; a Man of Distinction in his own Country for his Birth. Dec. 1.1. Wealth, and the great Number of Clients who followed his Fortunes; withal, Ambitious, Bold, Enus's Enter- terprizing. He imagined it was not impracticable to furprize the City, because of the Divisions that raged between the People and the Senate. He reckon'd that he shou'd raise the Slaves, be join'd by all the Exiles, and even get the common People to declare for him, by entertaining them with Hopes that he wou'd make them the absolute Disposers of the Laws of the Government. His Delign was, after having furprifed Rome, to make himself the Sovereign of it; or to deliver up the City to the Community of the Sabines, in case he were not able with his own Forces to maintain himself in his Usurpation.

He first communicated his Design to his particular Friends. Many enter'd into his Project, in hopes of enriching themselves by the Plunder of Rome; by their means he raised Four Thousand Men, as well his own Clients, as a great Number of Fugitive Slaves, Exiles, and Men of no Settlement, whom he gave a Retreat to in his own Estate. He then fill'd some flat-bottom'd Vessels with these Troops; and driving down the Stream of the Tyber in the Night-time, landed before Break of Day by the fide of the Capitol, He got up the Hill with-The Capiout being perceived by any Body, and under cover tol taken. of the Darkness possessed himself of the Temple of Jupiter, and the Fortress adjoyning to it. Thence he throws himself into the Neighbouring Houses, and cuts the Throats of all that refuse to join him. while part of his Soldiers fortify themselves and cut Intrenchments along the Hill. Those Romans that had escaped the first Fury of the Sabines run down to the City, carrying Terror and Affright along with them. The Alarm spreads every way; the Confuls, awakened by the Noise, and no less fearful of the Domestic than the foreign Enemy, knew not whether this Tumult comes from within or without. Their first care is to place Guards in the Forum, and at the City Gates. The Night is spent in Doubts and Uneafinefs: at length Day comes, and discovers who is at the Head of so daring and so strange an Enterprize.

Herdonius from the Top of the Capitol displays a A Hat up-Hat fixed upon a Spear, as the Signal of Liberty, on a Spear with Design to engage the Slaves, who were very the Signal numerous in the City, to come and join him. His Soldiers, in order to keep the People from taking Arms, cry that their General is come to Rome only to free the Inhabitants from the Senate's Tyranny, to abolish Usury, and set up Laws advantageous to the People. The Consuls got the Senate together by break of Day. They agreed to make the Peo-The Tribunes declar'd they wou'd ple take Arms. not oppose it, provided they did but know beforehand what Reward the Citizen and Soldier might expect, 'If you will promife us upon Oath, faid they to the Confuls, that as foon as we have retaken the Capitol, you will nominate the Com-· missioners whom we demand for the establishing of a Body of Laws, we are ready to march against the Enemies. But if you are yet inflexible, we · shall take care to withhold the People from expo-· fing their Lives to support so cruel and so tyranni-

The Senate heard not without the quickest Indignation, that the Tribunes shou'd thus set a Price as cal a Government.

it were upon the Defence of the City and the People's Service. It was plain they intended to take Advantage of the present dangerous Conjuncture. C. Claudius was rather for going without the People's mercenary Affiftance, than buying it with fuch odious Conditions. He was of Opinion that the Patricians themselves, with the help of their Clients were powerful enough to drive out the Enemy, That if they shou'd happen to want a greater Number of Troops, they might call the Latins and the other Allies to their Aid: And that in case of Extremity, they had better arm even their Slaves than The People to fubmit to the Tribunes. But the oldest Senators, take Arms. and those that had most Authority in that Assembly, feeing the Enemy over their Heads, and fearing the Sabines, the Æqui and the Volsci might be let into the City, were of opinion, that in fo imminent a Danger they ought not to refuse the People any thing that cou'd induce them to take Arms immediately. P. Valerius, first Conful, who was of this mind, went to the Forum, and promifed the People, that as foon as ever the Capitol was retaken, and the City restor'd to Quiet, he wou'd not hinder the Tribunes from proposing the Law: And that as to his own particular, whenever it was brought brought into Deliberation, he wou'd only confult the Good of his Fellow-Citizens, and wou'd always remember his Name as an hereditary Obligation upon him to favour the People's Interests in all Things, that were not contrary to the general Good of the Republic. The People charm'd with these Hopes took Arms, and folemnly fwore never to lay them down without leave from the Confuls. The Romans call'd this way of arming Tumultus, because Tumltus occasioned by unforeseen Accidents. None was ex- & Conjuempt from it. The General usually pronounced what those these Words: Let those that wou'd save the Republic words follow me. Then fuch as were affembled, swore all mean. together to defend the Commonwealth to the last Drop of their Blood: Which was call'd Conjuratio. When the People, all armed, had taken these Oaths the two Confuls, according to Custom, drew Lots which shou'd lead on the Attack. This Post fell to Valerius, and Claudius in the mean while marched out of the City at the Head of a Body of Troops, to hinder any Succours from coming to HERDO-NIUS, or to keep the Enemy from attacking any other part of the City to make a Diversion.

But no Troops appeared in the Country, except one Legion, which L. Mamilius, the supreme Magistrate of Tusculum, fent of his own accord to the Affistance of the Romans: Claudius ordered it to march into the City. Valerius put himself at the Head of the Citizens and Allies, and marched strait against the Enemy. The Romans and Tusculans fought with equal Emulation. They strove who shou'd have the Glory of forcing the Intrenchments first. HERDONIUS bore their Onset with a determined Courage: He was besides favoured by the Superiority of his Post. They fought for a long time with great Fury and equal Obstinacy. Day was already far spent, before it was possible to diffinguish which fide had the Advantage. Conful Valerius striving by his own Example to encourage his Soldiers to make another Push, was flain

The Capi-flain at the Head of the Attack. P. Volumnius, a tol re-ta- confular Person that fought near him, caused his Body to be covered, in order to conceal from the Troops the Knowledge of fo great a loss. He afterwards led them on with fo much Bravery, that the Sabines were forced to give Ground, and the Romans carried the Intrenchments before they perceiv'd that they fought without a General. HER-killed.

Herdonius DONIUS, having lost most of his Soldiers by disputeauses bim- ing the Ground Inch by Inch, seeing himself withfelf to be out Hopes, and his Fortifications forced, caused himself to be killed, to avoid falling alive into the Hands of the Romans. Those few of his Soldiers that were left, fell most of them upon their own Swords; fome threw themselves from the top of the Rock. Those that the Romans could take alive, were treated as Robbers. They no less severely punished the Deferters and Exiles that had joined HERDONIUS; and by this Victory the foreign Enemy was drove out of the City. But the domestic Foe still continued the most powerful in it, and the Tribunes even took Occasion from this Advantage, and the Promises of the Consul Valerius, to renew their Pretenfions and to raise fresh Troubles.

Those Magistrates of the People, or to speak more properly those eternal Fomenters of all Seditions, cited Claudius to propose the Law, and thereby to fatisfy the Manes of his Colleague, who had bound himself do it in so solemn a manner. The Conful, to flacken their Heat and gain time, had recourse to various Pretences. At one time he excused himself from holding the Assembly, upon account of the Necessity there was of purifying the Capitol, and offering Sacrifices to the Gods. At another time he amused the People with Games and Public Spectacles. At length having quite worn out these Pretences, and finding himself close prest by the Tribunes, he declared that the Republic being deprived of one of her Ru'ers by the Death of Valerius, it was expedient, before they offer'd to eftablifh establish any new Law, to proceed to the Election of another Conful; and accordingly he appointed the Day when the Comitia of Centuries shou'd be held. The Senate and the whole Body of the Nobility and Patricians who were fo greatly concerned to oppose the Reception of this Law, resolved to chuse in the room of Valerius some Consular, whose Merit might please the People, and who yet wou'd take care to defeat the Tribune's Proposal. With this Intent they cast their Eyes upon L. Quintius Cincinna Quintius tus, the Father of Ceso whom the People had lately Cincinnabanished with so much Malice. And they took their tus Conful, Measures so well, that the Day of Election being being come, the first Class, consisting of eighteen Centuries of Cavalry, and fourfcore of Infantry, gave him their Voices. This unanimous Confent of all the Centuries of a Class which out-number'd all the rest. fecured him that Dignity, and he was declared Conful in his Absence and without his Privity. The People were furprifed and terrified at this Choice: They plainly faw that by fetting over them a Conful provoked with the Banishment of his Son, the whole Defign was to defer the Publication of the Law. Nevertheless the Deputies of the Senate, without giving any heed to the People's Discontent, went to fetch QUINTIUS out of the Country, whither he was retired fince his Son's Difgrace, and where he tilled with his own Hands five or fix Acres of Land which were left out of the broken Remains of his Fortune.

These Deputies found him driving the Plough with his own Hands. By saluting him Consul, and presenting him with the Decree of his Election, they made him acquainted with the Subject of their Journey. That venerable old Man was under some Doubt what Resolution to take. Being wholly free from Ambition, in his own choice he preserr'd the Sweets of a rural Life to all the Pomp of the Consular Dignity. Nevertheless, Love of his Country prevailing in his Mind above his own Satisfaction, he took leave of his Wife, and recommending to her the care of the House,

Quintius Circinnatus's disinterested Speech.

House, 'I fear, says he, my dear Racilia, our Fields will be but ill manured this Year. They at the fame time invested him with a Robe bordered with Purple, and the Lictors with their Fasces presented themfelves to guard him and receive his Commands, Thus his Merit and the Necessities of the State brought him back to Rome, where he had never fet his Foot fince his Son's Difgrace. He had no fooner taken Possession of the Consulship, but he got an exact Relation to be made to him of all that happened in Herdonius's Invalion. Thence taking occasion to convene the Assembly of the People, he mounted the Rostrum, and without declaring himself either for the People or Senate, reprimanded them both with equal Severity. He reproached the Senate, that by their continual Compliance with all the Tribunes Pretenfions, they had fed the Infolence and rebellious Spirit of the People. He faid there was left in the Senators none of that love of their Country, and that defire of Glory which feemed to be fo natural to their Order. That a timorous Policy had taken place of the legal Authority, and of the firm Refolution which was fo necessary in Government. He added, that an unbridled Licentiousness reigned in Rome: That Subordination and Obedience feemed quite banished That now but lately, to the shame of the Roman Name some seditious Men had been seen to put a Price upon the Defence of their City, ready to acknowledge Herdonius for their Sovereign, if they might not change the Form of the Government. This is the Fruit, cried he, of those continual Harangues with which the People are fo infatuated. But I shall take care to carry them out of the way of these Seducers, which now reign in Rome with "more Insolence and Tyranny than ever did the Tarquins. Know then, Ye Roman People, that my Colleague and I have refolved to make War upon the Aqui and the Volsci. We declare too, that we will even pass the Winter in the Field without ever re-entering, during our Confulate, into a City fo full of Seditions. We command all those

- those that have taken the military Oath to appear
- to-morrow with their Arms at the Lake Regillus.

That shall be the Rendezvous of the whole Army.

The Tribunes answered in a scoffing manner, that Dispute they did not know but he might chance to go to the between War alone with his Colleague, and that they wou'd the Tribunes and take care no Levy shou'd be made. 'We shall not Confuls.

want Soldiers, replied Quintius; and we have yet

under our Command all those that took Arms before the Capitol, and fwore folemnly not to lay them down again without Permission from the Consuls. If by your Instigation they refuse to obey us, the Gods Avengers of Perjury will know how to punish them for their Defertion.

The Tribunes, to evade fo positive an Engage-Religionsment, cried out that that Oath bound them only to not of the the Person of Valerius, and so was buried with him Romans. in his Tomb. But the People, more plain-hearted. and in those Days ignorant of the pernicious Art of interpreting the Laws of Religion according to their own Purposes, rejected so frivolous a Distinction. Every Man prepared himself to take Arms, tho' very unwillingly. What still increased their Repugnance. was a Report which was spread about, that the Confuls had given private Directions to the Augurs to be very early in the Morning at the Bank of the Lake. It was apprehended that their Defign was to hold a general Affembly there, and that so all which had been done in former ones for the Advantage of the People might there be annulled, fince they cou'd then receive no Benefit from the Affiftance and Opposition of the Tribunes, whose Authority and Function were confined to a Mile about Rome: So that if they had gone to that Affembly, they wou'd have had no more Regard paid to them, than the meanest Plebeian, and been equally subject to the Power of the Confuls.

QUINTIUS, to keep the People in Awe, gave Quintius's out over and above, that at his Return he wou'd fevere but convene no Assembly for the Election of new Con-foundation.

,

to the Intent that the Seditious might learn by their Punishment, that all the Harangues of the Tribunes wou'd not be sufficient to shelter them from the Power and definitive Sentences of the supream Magistrate.

The People, who till then had never made War but against Enemies bordering upon Rome, being always accustomed to return home to their Houses at the end of every Campaign, were ftruck with Consternation at a Design which threatened to make them fpend the Winter in a Camp. The Tribunes were no less alarmed at the Thoughts of an Assembly out of Rome, where Resolutions might be taken contrary to their Interests. Both one and t'other, intimidated by the Firmness of the Confuls, had recourse to the Senate. The Women and Children, all in Tears. conjured the principal Men in the Senate to mollify Quintius, and to prevail with that rigorous Magistrate that their Husbands and their Fathers might return to their Homes at the end of the Campaign. The Affair was put upon a kind of Negotiation. This was the Point to which the Conful by this affected but necessary Severity wanted to bring the Tribunes. A fort of Provisional Treaty was made between them; QUINTIUS promised not to take Arms, and not to force the Troops to winter in the Field, unless he were conftrained to do it by some new Incursions of the Enemies; and the Tribunes on their parts bound themselves to make no Proposal to the People concerning the Establishment of the new Laws.

QUINTIUS, instead of making War, spent the whole time of his Consulate in dispensing Justice between Man and Man. He gave Audience to every body freely; he examined the Pleas of each Party with Attention, and then gave such equitable Judgments, that the People charmed with the Mildness of his Government, seemed to have forgot that there was any such thing as Tribunes in the Republic.

Notwithstanding a Conduct so full of Moderation and Equity, Virginius, Volscius, and the rest of the Tribunes.

Tribunes, used all their Endeavours to get themselves perpetuated in the Tribuneship, alledging that the People stood in need of their Zeal and Capacity to procure the Reception of Terentillus's Proposal. The Senate, forefeeing the Abuses that might proceed from such a perpetual Magistracy, made a Decree prohibiting any Citizen (in the Elections) from standing two Years together for the fame Office. But without any regard to a Regulation fo necessary for the maintaining of the public Liberty, Those Tribunes, accustomed to the Sweets of Authority made fo much ftir, that they were continued in the fame Employment a third time. The Senate apprehending there was nothing which those seditious Spirits wou'd not attempt, without confidering the Decree they had just published, were also on their side for continuing QUINTIUS in the Confulship; but that Val. Maxi great Man opposed it warmly; he represented with 1.4.c. i. great Gravity to the Senators the wrong they did themselves in offering to violate their own Laws. That nothing shewed the Weakness of the Government more than that Multitude of new Laws which were proposed daily but never observed. That it was by this wavering Conduct, that they justly drew upon themselves the Contempt of the Multitude. The Senate, equally touched with the Wisdom and the Moderation of Quintius, return'd to his Opinion. The Election was made Q. Fabius Vibulanus and L. Cor-Year of nelius Maluginensis were named Consuls for the ensu-Rome ing Year. Scarce was QUINTIUS out of his Post, 294. but he went back to the Country, to refume his former Labour and Occupations. After his Departure, the Friends of his Family, Liv. Dec.

After his Departure, the Friends of his Family, Liv. Decard and among others A. Cornelius and Q. Servilius, 1. 1. 3. both Quæstors that Year, provoked at the unjust Exile of Ceso, prosecuted M. Volscius his Accuser for Volscius being the Author and Minister of so cruel a Prosecu-accused tion. Those two Quæstors, by the Power belonging to their Office, convened the Assembly of the People. They produced their Witnesses, some of which gave Testimony that they had seen Ceso in the Army, on the very Day when Volscius pretended he killed his Brother at Rome; others affirmed that Volfeins's Brother died of a languishing Distemper, which was upon him fome Months, and that he never ftirred out of his House after he fell ill. These Facts and many others were attefted by fo many Persons of unquestionable Credit, that there was no room left to doubt of Volscius's Malice in this Calumny. But the Tribunes being the Colleagues and Accomplices of Volscius, put a stop to this Prosecution, declaring they wou'd not fuffer the People's Votes to be gathered upon any Affair whatfoever, before they had given their Suffrages with relation to the Laws proposed. The Senate made use of the same Excuse in their turn, and whenever the five Commissioners demanded by the Tribunes were talk'd of, revived the Bufiness of Volscius. The Confulate of Fabius and Cornelius pass'd away in these successive Contentions.

R

I

1

Year of Rome 295.

The Wars broke out afresh under that of C. Nautius and L. Minutius their Successors. The Sabines and Æqui renewed their Irruptions. Nautius marched against the Sabines, defeated them and entred their Territory, where he laid all wafte with Fire and Minutius was not fo fuccessful against the Sword. - Æqui. That timorous General, who thought less of conquering than of avoiding being conquered, had like to have perished with his whole Army thro' Excess of Precaution. He suffered himself to be pushed by the Enemy into Straits, where at his Back, at his Right and Left he had Mountains that indeed covered his Camp, but at the fame time hinder'd him from going out of it. This rugged Place left him but one Passage out: The Æqui were beforehand with the Romans, and got Possession of it. They then fortified themselves there in such a manner, that it was impossible to constrain them to fight: They eafily fetched their Provisions and Forage from the Country behind them, while the Roman Army, shut up within the Straits of those Mountains, were in want of every thing. Some Horsemen, who under cover of the Night made their way thro' the Enemy's Camp, carried the News to Rome. They faid, that the Army being furrounded on all fides, and in a manner belieged, wou'd for want of Provisions be oblig'd to throw down their Arms, if they were not speedily relieved. Quintius Fabius, the Governor of the City, immediately dispatched a Messenger to the other Conful to inform him of the Extremity his Colleague was in: Nautius leaving his Army under the Command of his Lieutenants, fet out privately, and repaired to Rome in all hafte. He arrived there in the Night, and after conferring out of hand with some of the chief of the Senate, it was agreed, that it was necessary upon this Occasion to have recourse to the Remedy, which was wont to be made use of rear of in the greatest Calamities, that is to fay, to name a Rome Dictator. The Conful, according to the Preroga- 295. tive of the Confulship, named L. QUINTIUS CIN-CINNATUS, and returned with the fame Diligence L. O. Cinto put himself again at the Head of his Army. The cinnatus Governor of Rome fent the Conful's Decree to Quin-Dictators tius; they found that great Man as before, cultivating his little Inheritance with his own Hands. The Deputies, at the same time that they gave him Information of his new Dignity, presented to him four and twenty Lictors armed with Axes bound up in their Fasces, a kind of Guards used by the ancient Kings of Romé, and which the Confuls had retained in Part, only they never carried Axes in the City but before the Dictator. The Senate having Notice that Quintius drew near, fent him a Boat in which he cross'd the Tyber; his three Children, his Friends, and the principal of the Senate received him at his Landing, and conducted him to his House. Dictator next Day named for General of his Hotse L. Tarquitius, a Patrician of uncommon Valour, but who not having wherewithal to buy and keep a Horfe. had till then never ferved but in the Infantry. Thus all the Hopes of the Republic lay in an old Man just a weak

taken from the Plough, and in a Foot-Soldier intrufted with the general Command of the Horse.

But these Men, whose Poverty was glorious to them, wanted for no Greatness of Soul and Valour in Command. The Dictator ordered the Shops to be shut up, and all Inhabitants that were of an Age fit to bear Arms, to be before Sun-set in the Field of Mars, each with twelve Stakes, and Victuals for five He then put himself at the Head of these Days. Troops, and before Day arrived pretty near the Enemy's Camp. He went himself and viewed it, as well as the Obscurity of the Night would permit him. His Soldiers by his Command made feveral loud Shouts, to give the Conful Notice of the Arrival of Succour; they intrenched themselves, and fortified their Intrenchments with a Pallisado, made of the Stakes they had brought from Rome: And these Intrenchments ferved at the fame time to shut up the Enemy's Camp. The General of the Æqui, named Gracebus Duilius, endeavoured, notwithstanding the Darkness, to interrupt this Work. His Troops advanced, but with that Fear and Doubt which is always occasioned by the Night and a Surprize. Quintius, who forefaw this Attack, fet one part of his Army against them, while the other continued to intrench themselves. The Noise of Arms, and the Shouts of the Combatants made the Conful yet more certain that Succour was come. He attacked the Camp of the Æqui on his fide, not fo much with hopes of carrying it, as with design to make a Diversion. This second Attack drew part of the Æqui to that fide, and gave the Dictator time to finish his Intrenchments, so that the Enemy at break of Day faw themselves in their turn besieged by two Armies. The Battel began a new at the return of Light. The Dictator and Conful then attacked the Enemy's Camp with their whole Power. Quintius found the part that he attacked the least fortified, because the General of the Æqui did not imagine he shou'd have occasion to defend himself on that side: He made but a weak Resistance, and being apprehensive that his Camp wou'd be won Sword in Hand, he had recourse to Negotiation. He sent Deputies to the Conful, who, without fo much as hearing their Message, referred them to the Dictator. Those Deputies being come to his Presence, notwithstanding the heat of the Action, conjured him to restrain the Impetuofity of his Soldiers, and not to make his Glory of the Destruction of almost a whole Nation; and offered him to quit their Camp and retire without Baggage, without Cloaths and without Arms, QUINTIUS re-D.H.l.10. plied sternly, that he did not esteem them so much Liv. Dec. as to think their Death wou'd be of any consequence c. 28. to the Republic; that therefore he freely granted them Val. Max. their Lives; but that their General and principal Offi-1. 2. c. 7. cers must remain Prisoners of War, and all their Soldiers pass under the Yoke, otherwise he wou'd immediately cut them all to Pieces. The Æqui being furrounded every way, fubmitted to all the Conditions that their victorious Enemy pleased to impose on them. Two Javelins were fixed in the Earth, and a third fastened across upon the Points of those. All the Equi, The Equi naked and unarmed, passed under this military Por-pass under tico: An Infamy which the Conquerors were wont the Yoak. to impose upon the Vanquished, who cou'd neither fight nor retire. At the same time they delivered up to the Romans their General and Officers, who were referved to attend the Dictator's Triumph.

Quintius faves the Conful's Army.

Quintius gave the Plunder of the Enemy's Camp to the Army he had brought with him from Rome, without retaining any thing for himself, or suffering the Troops of the Consul, whom he had relieved, to take any share in it. 'Soldiers, said he to them feverely, you that were upon the Brink of falling a Prey to our Enemies, you shall have no share in their Spoils. Then turning to the Consul: And you, Minutius, added he, you shall never more command these Legions in Chief, till you have shewn more Courage and Capacity. This military Correction did not at all lessen the respect

2 Dictator

+ ifinte-restedness.

and Acknowledgment which these Troops paid their Deliverer; and the Conful and his Soldiers decreed him a Crown of Gold of a pound Weight, for having faved the Lives and Honour of his Fellow-citizens.

The Senate having received Advice of the Victory which the Dictator had obtained, and the judicious Partition he had made of the Enemy's Spoils, being perfectly ashamed that so great a Captain shou'd spend his old Age in Poverty, sent him word they defign'd he shou'd take to himself a considerable Share of the Booty he had won from the Enemy. They were even for allotting him a Portion of the Lards conquered from the Agui, with a fufficient Number of Slaves and Cattle to stock it. But Quintius', QUINTIUS thought he owed his Country yet a greater Example. He preferred that Poverty, which he look'd upon as the Afylum and Support of Liberty, to all the Wealth that was offered him; being perluaded that nothing can be more free and independent than a Citizen, who without having any Expectations from others, receives his whole Subfistance from his own Labour or Inheritance.

> This great Man, in less than a Fortnight's time, brought off the Consul's Army, defeated that of the Enemy, and returned back to Rome in Triumph, There were led before his Chariot the Enemy's General, and a great Number of Officers in Chains, who were the chief Ornament of that Procession. The Roman Soldiers followed him with Garlands of Flowers upon their Heads, celebrating his Victory with military Songs. He then abdicated the Dictature the fixteenth Day after his Advancement to it, tho' he might legally have held that Dignity fix Months. Such uncommon Moderation added yet more to his Glory, and the Love of his Fellow-citizens.

> The Friends of his Family laying hold of this favourable Conjuncture, at length prevailed to have Volstus

Volscius the Accuser of Quintius Cefo, his Son, brought to a Trial before his Abdication. The Affembly was held; the Informer being convicted of Calumny Cic. pro and false Testimony, was condemned to perpetual domo suo. Banishment; Ceso was recalled home, and the Tri-Ceso rebunes finding the People adored his Father, durst sall d from not oppose so just a Sentence. Quintius, contented Exile. with his Son's Return, and cloathed with Glory, broke away from the Praises and Applause of the Romans, and went again and buried himself in his Cottage, where he fell once more to his old Labours.

He did not stay there long; new Disturbances New Diraifed by the Tribunes of the People upon account flurbances of the Publication of the Terentillian Law, out of raised by fpite at Ceso's Return, obliged the Senate to recall the Trihis Father, to fet him up against those seditious Ma-the People. giftrates. The Sabines and Equi, under the Con- Year of fulate of C. Horatius and Q. Minucius, had lately Rome been making their customary Inroads up to the very 296. Gates of Rome. The Senate immediately order'd the two Confuls to march against the Enemies out of hand. The Conduct of the Army appointed against the Equi fell by Lot to Horatius; and Minucius was intrusted with the Command of that which was defigned against the Sabines. But when the People were to arm, the Tribunes opposed it, and protested in their old way, that they wou'd not fuffer one Plebeian to give his Name to go to the War, till they proceeded to the Election of the Commiffioners. The Confuls, who cou'd not without Concern fee the Enemy laying waste the Territory of Rome with Impunity, convened the Senate to find Means to remove their Opposition. Quintius, who was come back from his Country Retreat, reprefented with his usual Firmness, that instead of wasting time in contending with the Tribunes, they ought to march directly against the Enemy; that if the People, still mis-led by their Tribunes, persisted in their Disobedience, he advised that the whole Senate and the Patricians, with their Friends and Clients, shou'd take Arms; that spite of the Tribunes, they shou'd be follow'd by all good Men who sincerely loved their Country; that for his part, tho' depressed with Years, he was ready to set the Example sirst, and that they shou'd find in Battel either a glorious Victory or an honourable Death.

The whole Senate applauded fo generous a Refolution. Those venerable old Men hasted to their Houses to take Arms; and attended by their Sons, their Clients and their Servants, they repaired to the Forum, where the Conful C. Horatius had convened the Affembly, The People all flocked thither, and feemed touched at fo new a Sight, The Conful represented to them, that all those illustrious Men chose rather to expose themselves to almost a certain Death, than to endure the Enemy any longer at the Gates of Rome, and exhorted all good Citizens to join them, in order to avenge the Glory of the Roman Name. But Virginius, who had got himself continued five Years together in the Tribunefhip, cried out with great Vehemence, that he wou'd never fuffer the People to take Arms till the Bufiness of the Laws was first determined. The Conful, upon this, turning towards the Tribune with a

The Conful Countenance full of Indignation: 'It must be con-C. Hora- 'fessed, says he to him, you perform a very heroic tius'; 'Action, and keep strictly up to your ordinary Behaviour, in fomenting eternal Divisions between the People and the Senate; but do not imagine your Clamours and Opposition shall make us abandon the Republick, founded upon such fortunate Auspices. Know, Virginius, and you other Tribunes, that these illustrious old Men, whom you fee bending more under the Number of their

Years, than the Weight of their Armour, are going to fight generoully against the Enemies of the Roman Name; while You, the intrepid Defenders of the People's Rights, lie hid behind our Walls, and, like fearful Women, wait with

'Anxiety

Anxiety for the Event of the War. Unless perhaps you please yourselves with a sancy, that after the doubtful Chance of Arms has rid you of the Senate and the Roman Nobility, the Enemy, when victorious, as a Recompence of your Cowardice and Baseness, will leave you in a quiet Enjoyment of the Tyranny you have usurped, and not destroy Rome, tho' in every Part of it they find nothing but Monuments and Trophies of their former Deseats.

But even the for your fakes they shou'd spare it, be assured, that our Wives and Children, aster having lost their Fathers, their Husbands, and all that was most dear to them, will have too much Courage to survive us, they are firmly resolved to set every thing in Flames, and so bury themselves under the Ruins of their Country. Such, O Romans, added the Consul, are the dismal Effects which your perpetual Dissentions must 'unavoidably produce.

The People were melted at so moving a Discourse; every Body shed Tears: The Consul sinding them softened, and giving way himself to his Sorrow, 'Are not you ashamed, added he, to see those illustrious old Men, those Senators whom you call your Fathers, devote themselves generousely to a certain Death for a rebellious and insolent People? Do you deserve the Name of Romans? And ought you not to hide your Heads with Consultance fusion, false as you are to your Country, Deserters of her Armies, and greater Enemies to your Gererals than the very Æqui and *Sabines?*Virginius, perceiving that the Conful's Reproach made an Impression upon the Multitude, thought it time to conform to the present Conjuncture; and affuming a milder Behaviour; 'No, we will never the Trivial of the Tri * abandon you, Conscript Fathers, said he, nor are bune's mowe capable of betraying the Interest of our Coun-derate Antry. We will live and die with you: Death must fiver.

be pleasant to us, fighting under such worthy Leaders

Leaders for the common Defence of our Country. It is true, that being Citizens of the same State, and contributing all equally, and with the Price of our Blood to establish Liberty, we have demanded Laws Superior to the Authority of the Senate, and restrictive of its Extent. But is it not the · effential Constitution of all Republican States, that ono Body shou'd be subject to any but the Law, and that the Law shou'd be more powerful than the Magistrate? Nevertheless, if you persist in your Resolution of standing to the ancient Customs, I confent for my Particular to mention it no more; · I will even wave my Opposition; and I am ready to exhort the People to take Armsand follow you, s provided you will grant them one Favour, which will be of Service to them, without being at all detrimental to your Authority.

The Conful made Answer, that if his Request

was reasonable, the People wou'd always find the Senate ready to favour to them, and that he might freely speak his Mind. Virginius having conferred a moment with his Colleagues, replied, that he defired he might explain himself in the Senate. The Confuls immediately adjourned to it: Virginius follow'd them: He carried with him the Original Decree of the Creation of the Tribunes. Being admitted into the Affembly, he read it aloud with the Virginius Permission of the Consuls, and added: 'All that demands to the People request of you by my Mouth, Conscript Fathers, is, that you wou'd please to add five Tribunes more to those that were first ple created' established upon the Mons Sacer, so that henceinstead of ' forth the five first Classes may each have two Tribunes.' Virginius then retired, to leave the Senate to deliberate about his Proposal, Caius Clau-Occasion. dius highly opposed this new Demand. He reprefented to the Assembly, that to add five more Tribunes to the five old ones, was to multiply the number of their Enemies; that by Degrees they wou'd form a fecond Senate, whose only Aim wou'd be to ruin bave ten Tribunes five. Disputes . upon this ruin the Authority of the first. But Quintius took this in another light; he maintained on the contrary, that by multiplying the Number of the Tribunes, it wou'd make it the more easy to sow Division among them, That there wou'd always be some one less feditious than the rest, who out of respect to the Senate, or perhaps out of Jealoufy, wou'd oppose the Enterprizes of the others, which wou'd be sufficient to prevent them from taking effect. That they ought to rejoice to fee them renounce for this the new Laws which they before demanded fo earneftly; fince no Body was to be told, that in matter of Government, all Change in the Laws shook the very Foundations of the State. The Opinion of that Year of great Man pass'd by plurality of Voices. Virginius Rome, was call'd in again; the first Consul inform'd him 296. that the Senate granted his Request. He took care ment of the to fet off this new Favour in Terms agreeable to the Tribunes. Dignity of the Body which he was at the Head of: And the Senate and People, with a mutual agreement, concurred equally, though with opposite Views, to the Augmentation of the Number of the Tribunes.

It was not long e're the Senate found that their Compliance with the last Demands of the People, only put them upon new Pretentions. And indeed, The Trithe Tribunes, grown more audacious than ever by their bunes pre-Number, proposed that Mount Aventine should be pose that granted to the People, or at least that Part of it Mount Awhich was not occupied by Patricians. L. Icilius, spou'd be the Head of the College of Tribunes, remonstrated, granted to that the Land of that Mountain belonged to the Re-the People, public; that some Patricians had indeed purchased D.H. 1. certain Parcels of it; but that others had got Poffef-10. fion of what they enjoy'd by mere Usurpation. That the remaining part of that Ground being uncultivated and uninhabited, he demanded that it shou'd be given gratis to the People, who growing daily more numerous, began now to want Habitations. He proposed at the same time, that the Patricians shou'd be confirmed in the Possession of those Parcels which they shou'd shew good Claims to, and that those of that order shou'd be turned out who had built upon it without any lawful Title, being however first repaid the Value of the Houses they had built.

they

To outward Appearance there was nothing but Inflice in this Proposal: It was besides a Matter of

Year of Rome 297.

simall Importance: But M. Valerius and Sp. Virginius, the Confuls for that Year, apprehending that from this Partition of Mount Aventine, the People might claim a Right to renew their old Pretensions upon the conquered Lands, delayed calling the Senate, in hopes this new Demand wou'd by degrees fall of itself. Icilius perceiving the Design of the Consuls in this affected Omission to convene the Senate, ventured upon an Attempt never heard of before: He sent them an Apparitor, commanding them to assemble the Senate forthwith, and repair to it themselves without delay.

Enterprize of the Tribune Icilius.

> The Confuls, juftly provoked at the Tribune's Audaciousness, and the Apparitor's want of Respect, ordered that Errand-bringer of theirs to be driven away ignominiously; and one of the Confuls Lictors, by their Directions, gave him some Bastinadoes for his pains. This was enough to open the feditious Mouth of the Tribune, who only wanted a Pretence to inveigh against the Senate. He represented to the People, that in the Person of his Apparitor they had violated the facred Privileges of the Tribuneship; he caused the Consuls Lictor to be feized, and was immediately for putting him to Death, as a Man guilty of Sacrilege and devoted to the infernal Gods. The Confuls, tho' the chief Magiftrates of the Republic, cou'd not rescue him out of the Hands of those who were both his Adversaries and his Judges.

The Senate endeavoured to gain over some one of the Tribunes that might put a stop to this Fury of one of his Colleagues; but Icilius had been beforehand with them there, and had so warmly represented to all the Tribunes that the Power and

Strength

Strength of their College lay wholly in their Union. that they agreed none should oppose what was determined among them by plurality of Voices. Thus the poor Lictor faw himself just upon the point of lofing his Life, for having obeyed the Orders of the Confuls too punctually. The Senate, to fave him, were obliged to come to a Composition with the Tribunes. The Lictor was indeed fet at Liberty; but Mount Aventine was yielded to the People by a Senatusconfultum: And this was what made a very great Breach in the Authority of the Confuls: for the Tribunes, after the Example of Icilius, kept themselves always afterwards in possession of this new Prerogative of convening the Senate; they who at their Institution durst not so much as go into it, but attended its Commands under a Portico like common Officers.

They did not stop here; Icilius, the boldest and Entermost enterprizing of all the Tribunes, being conti-prize of nued in that Magistracy for the following Year, the Tribaid a Design to bring the Consuls themselves under bunes at their Subjection, and to oblige those chief Magi-Consuls. Strates of the Republic, tho' invested with the Sovereign Power, to undergo the Judgment of the Asfembly of the People.

T. Romilius and C. Veturius, who were Confuls this Year, finding the State was never more at rest year of at home than when her Arms were carried abroad, Rome resolved to make War against the Æqui and Sabines 298. in revenge of their continual Inroads and Devastations. The Bulinels was to raise Troops, and get the Legions to march out of Rome. The two Confuls, but especially Romilius, a Magistrate severe and haughty in his Nature, raifed those Troops and proceeded in the Involment of the Plebeians, with a Rigour very improper in the present Disposition of the People's Minds. They admitted no manner of Excuse, and condemned to heavy Fines all those that did not appear immediately upon their being called. Romilius even eaused several to be taken into Custody, dy, for trying upon different Pretences to get off from going to the War that Campaign. The Tribunes did not fail to take their Parts, and they endeavoured to rescue those Prisoners out of the Hands of the Lictors. The Confuls advanced to support the Execution of their Orders: The Tribunes enraged at their Refistance and backed by the angry Populace, were fo prefumptuous as to offer to feize the Confuls themselves, and to command the Ædiles to lead them to the public Prisons. This Attempt upon the Sovereign Magistrates of the Republic increases the Tumult; the Patricians, provoked at the Audaciousness and Insolence of these Tribunes. fly among the Crowd, strike all without Distinction that oppose them, disperse the Assembly, and oblige the Tribunes to fly like the rest, after having been foundly beaten. These latter, confounded and enraged at the ill Success of their Undertaking, convened the Affembly for the next Day, and took care to bring to it most of the Plebeians out of the Country. The Affembly was very numerous; the Tribunes, feeing themselves the strongest, caused the two Consuls to be fummoned like the meanest private Men; and the Apparitor cited them to come and answer before the Affembly of the People for what had happened the Day before: The Confuls rejected the Citation with Scorn. Then the Tribunes, who flattered themselves the Senate wou'd oblige them, as they had done Coriolanus and Cefo; to acknowledge the Authority of the Assembly of the People, and submit to their Judgment, repaired to the Palace. Being introduced into the Senate, they demanded Juflice for the Violence which they pretended to have been done them by the Confuls. They added, that in their Persons the sacred Laws of the Tribuneship had been violated; that they hoped the Senate wou'd never fuffer fo great a Crime to escape without Punishment; and that they expected in the first place either that the Confuls shou'd clear themselves by Oath from having had any hand in the last Tumult; or, if a just Remorfe of Conscience hinder'd them from taking fuch an Oath, that they shou'd be condemned by a Senatusconfultum to appear before the Affembly of the People, and undergo their Judgment. Romilius answered them, and reproached them in a very high strain, that they themselves. by opposing the Levy of Soldiers, were the only Beginners of this Tumult; that they had carried their Audaciousness so far, as to go about to seize upon the Confuls, the fovereign Magistrates of the Republic; that even now they had the Infolence to threaten them in full Senate to make them submit to the Judgment of the People, when they had not Power to bring the very meanest of the Patricians before them without a Senatusconfultum on purpose. And he declared to them, that if they were fo daring as to offer to proceed a step further in so unreasonable an Enterprize, he would immediately put the whole Body of Patricians in Arms, march into the Forum at their Head, fall upon every Body that appeared against him, and that perhaps he might make them repent their having abused the Senate's Patience in fo gross a manner, and their having given fuch a Loose to their unbounded Audaciousness.

These Disputes held so long, that it grew Night before the Senate cou'd come to any Resolution in this Affair; and most of the Senators were glad that these mutual Complaints and Reproaches had wasted the time of the Assembly, that they might not be obliged to decide the Contest between the Tribunes and Confuls, and especially that they might avoid giving the former, by a Refufal, the Pretence they wanted to raise a new Sedition.

Those Tribunes plainly perceiving that the Senate intended to draw the Business into length, convened the Affembly of the People next Day, and made their Report to them of what had passed in the Senate. They declared, that no Justice was to be expected from a Body in which their Enemies governed, and that they would throw up the Tri-buneship,

buneship, if the People did not come to some vigorous Resolution, which was so necessary for the Prefervation of their Dignity.

The most mutinous among the Plebeians were for retiring a fecond time upon the Mons Sacer in Arms. and from thence to begin the War against the Patricians. Others, more moderate in appearance. but indeed restrained only by the Fear of a Civil War, proposed that without taking up Arms or folliciting a Senatusconfultum any longer, the People by their own proper Authority should try the Confuls, and condemn them to a large Fine. Laftly. fuch as had not entirely lost the Respect that was due to the first Magistrates in the Republic, reprefented that it was a Thing unheard of, for an Affembly of the People to pretend to try two Confuls in the very Year of their Consulate, and especially without the Participation of the Senate. That fuch a Step feemed to them very bold; that they did not doubt it would ftir up fresh Tumults, which at length might produce a Civil War. That the Success of that was uncertain; that it was even to be feared if the Patricians got the better, they would utterly destroy the Peoples Authority, to be revenged of those who had gone about to carry it too far, That therefore they were for deferring all further Proceeding against the Consuls, till they were out of their Office; and that in the mean while they might profecute only fuch private Persons as had Thewn most Zeal for their Interests.

Of these three different Opinions, the Tribunes stuck to the second, which they thought the safest and most ready way to satisfy their Resentment, and they appointed an Assembly, wherein the People at their Suit should condemn the Consuls in a Fine. But the Tribunes perceiving after the Peoples sirst Heat was over, that they shewed less Eagerness to carry a Point which they shought concerned only those Magistrates, they resolved, in order to make the more sure of their Revenge, to defer defer it, and even to cloath it with the old Pretence of the People's Good, without making the least mention of their Difference with the Confuls. Thus the Day fet for the Affembly being come, Icilius, who spoke for the rest of his Colleagues, declared that the College of Tribunes, at the Intreaty and for the fakes of the best Men in the Senate, dropt their Suit against the Consuls; but that tho' they gave up their own Interests, they were not capable of neglecting those of the People. That therefore they demanded, that a Body of Laws should be drawn up and made public; that the Bufiness of the Partition of the Lands should next be proceeded to; that it was high time to pass so equitable a Law, Icilias + which had been long proposed, but always kept off vives the by the Artifices of the Patricians. At the same Terentil-time he exhorted such Plebeians as were personally jed. interested in this Affair, to speak their Minds freely to the Affembly.

Upon this a Plebeian named L. Siccius or Sicinius Siccius's Dentatus ascended the Rostrum. He was an Old Speech.

Man of a handsome Aspect, tho' near threescore Years of Age; and with a Soldier's Eloquence he fpoke gloriously of his own Valour, and of all the Actions in which he had fignalized himself. He first represented, that it was full forty Years that he had bore Arms; that he had been in a hundred and twenty Engagements; that he had received five and forty Wounds, and all before; that in one fingle Battel he had been wounded in twelve feveral Places; that he had obtained fourteen Civic Crowns, for having faved the Lives of fo many Citizens in Battel; that he had received three Mural Crowns, for having first mounted the Breach in Towns taken by Storm; that his Generals had given him eight other Crowns, for having rescued the Standards of the Legions out of the Hands of the Enemies; that he had to shew in his House fourscore Collars of Gold, above threescore Bracelets, gilded Javelins, gorgeous Armours, and Furnitures of Horses, as the Testimonies and Rewards

Rewards of the Victories he had gained in fingle Combats in the View of the two Armies. That nevertheless no manner of Regard had ever been had to all these honourable Marks of his Services, and that neither he, nor Numbers of other brave Soldiers, who with the Lofs of their Blood had won for the Republic the better part of her Territory, poffessed the least Portion of it: That their Conquests were fallen a Prey to fome few Patricians, whose only Merit was the Nobility of their Descent, and the Recommendation of their Names. That not one of them cou'd justify his Possession of those Lands by any lawful Title; unless they looked upon the Domain of the State to be their Patrimony, and the Plebeians to be vile Slaves, unworthy of having any Share in the Fortune of the Commonwealth. that it was time for that generous People to do themfelves Justice, and that they ought to shew immediately, by paffing the Law for the Partition of the Lands without delay, that they had no less Resolution to stand by the Proposals of their Tribunes, than they had shewn Courage in the Field against the Enemies of the State.

Varro de Lingua Latinâ. D.H.1.10.

> Icilius gave great Commendations to the Pronouncer of this Discourse. But as he affected to appear a firict Observer of the Laws, he told him, they cou'd not with Justice refuse to hear what the Patricians shou'd please to alledge against the Law, and so adjourned the Affembly to the Day following.

The two Confuls during great part of the Night held private Conferences with the chief Men of the Senate, to confider what Measures were most proper to be taken to frustrate the Designs of the Tribune. After various Counfels, it was refolved to employ first the most infinuating Manners, and the whole Art of Eloquence to win upon the People, and diffuade them from the Publication of the Law: But that if, by the Instigation of their Tribunes, they continued obstinately resolute to give their Voices for it, they shou'd oppose it with a high hand, and even even make use of Extremities. Word was sent to, all the Patricians to be at the Forum very early with their Friends and Clients; that part of them shou'd surround the Rostrum to prevent the Tribunes from being the strongest about it, and that the rest of the Nobility shou'd disperse themselves among the Assembly in small Parties, to oppose the Distribution of the Tablets.

The Patricians did not fail to be in the Forum very early, and took Possession of all the Posts agreed upon. The Confuls being come, the Tribunes caused Tumult on Proclamation to be made by a Herald, that if any the Lex Citizen had any folid Reasons to offer against the Terentilla. Publication of the Law, he might afcend the Rofrum and lay them before the People. Divers Senators prefented themselves one after another; but the Moment they began to speak, an insolent Pack of scoundrel People, suborned by the Tribunes, set up fuch confused Clamours, that it was impossible to hear what they faid. The Confuls, full of Indignation at this Infolence, protefted warmly against all that shou'd be done in so tumultuous an Assembly. Then the Tribunes, throwing afide the Mask, told them confidently, that their Protest shou'd not hinder the Promulgation of the Law; that the People had already been too long amused with vain Speeches. whose affected Prolixity was only intended to stave off the Decision of this Affair, and that therefore the Voices of the Assembly must now bring it to some Iffue: And thereupon Icilius commanded the Urns to be opened, and the Tablets to be deliver'd out to the People. The Officers making feady to exeeute his Orders, several young Patricians of the best Families in the Republic, taking this Command as the Signal which they had privately agreed upon, took away the Urns, and scattered about the Billits: Others at the Head of their Friends and Clients, throw themselves into the Crowd, push, strike and disperse the People, and at length remain Masters of the Forum. The Tribunes, exasperated to the highest Pitch to see their Measures thus disconcerted.

concerted, retired last of all; but they convened the Affembly again for the next Day; and after having complained that the Majesty of the Roman People shou'd be thus openly violated, they demanded Permission to enquire after the Authors of this Tumult, which was immediately granted them.

Senators Sacrificed

They did not want for Witnesses who deposed unanimously, that the Disorder was raised by most to the Ha- of the young Patricians. But as their great Numtred of the ber served them in a manner for an Asylum, and it was impossible to include in the Indictment all the Patricians in the Republic, the Tribunes, who only wanted to facrifice fuch Victims to their Refentment as might intimidate the Senate, turned the whole Accufation upon those who were of the Post-D.H.1.10. humian, Sempronian, and Clelian Families.

Liv. Dec. were cited to appear before the next Affembly of 1.1. 3. the People. But tho' these young Patricians valued themselves upon having hindered the Law from being passed, the Senate did not care to let them appear, nor that any Body should undertake their Defence. The wifest Senators flattered themselves, that by giving them up to the People, this Moderation would diminish their Resentment, or that having given a Vent to their Fury by condemning of them, this Revenge wou'd put the Profecution of the Law out of their Heads. Mean while the Day of the Affembly being come, the more violent Spirits among the People were for enquiring into this Affair with the utmost Severity; but the more prudent fort, who looked upon this Silence of the Patricians as a tacit Acknowledgment of the Fault of the Persons accused, being satisfied that they were left to the People's Judgment, were only for condemning them to a Fine, which was agreed to by Plurality of Voi-The Senate did not oppose it; they even suffered the Effects of the Criminals to be fold publickly to pay it, and the Produce was confecrated to Ceres. But the Senate caused those Effects to be bought again by private Hands with Their Money.

They

They were some time afterwards restored to the former Proprietors; and the Senate was not displeased at having stopt the Publication of the Law, only with the Expence of a little Money. But the Tribunes were not fo eafily blinded. They foon fell again upon the Division of the Lands. It was the common Subject of their Harangues.

While the People spent whole Days in the Forum Tusculum listening to those Declaimers, there arrived Express attack d fes from Tusculum, with Advice, that the Æqui were and refallen upon the Territory of that City, which was lieved. allied to the Roman People; that they laid wafte the whole Country with Fire and Sword; that it was even to be feared they wou'd carry that Town, if they laid Siege to it: and the Inhabitants begg'd for Succour with the greatest Earnestness. The Senate immediately decreed, that the Confuls shou'd take the Field with the Forces of the Republic. The Tribunes failed not to oppose it, according to their old Custom, and wou'd fain have had their Consent bought by the Publication of the Law. But the People, more generous than their Magistrates, remembring the Affiftance they had received from Tufculum against Herdonius's Invasion, heartily offered to take Arms. An Army was raised out of hand; the two Confuls put themselves at the Head of it. Siccius Dentatus, the Plebeian that had spoke so zealoufly in favour of the Agrarian Law, appeared under their Standard with eight hundred Veterans like himself, who had all compleated the time of Service prescribed by Law, but yet wou'd go once more to the War under the particular Command of Siccius, whom they loudly named the Roman Achilles.

Their Army advanced to Algidum, fixteen Miles from Rome, and met the Enemy not far from the City of Antium. They were intrenched upon the The Romans incamped upon an Top of a Hill. Eminence over against them; they fortified themfelves carefully, and the Generals kept the Soldiers within the Camp, to conceal their Force from the Enemy. The Æqui took these Precautions, for a

Sign

Victory over the Æqui; Siccius's Valour.

Sign of Fear in the Confuls. They often descended into the Plain, and came sometimes to the very Edge of the Intrenchments of the Camp, whence they upbraided the Romans with the Faint-heartedness of their Generals. The two Confuls, to confirm the Enemy in this false Confidence, still kept the Gates of the Camp shut. But one Day when Romilius commanded in chief, and had the fole Power of giving Orders; that Conful perceiving that the whole Army of the Equi was gone out of their Camp, and that most of the Soldiers scattering up and down the Country, were foraging in Security quite to the very foot of his Intrenchments, he refolved to charge them in the Plain, and at the same time to fall upon the Camp they had upon the Hill, that they might not know on which fide the true Attack was. For this purpose he sent for Siccius Dentatus, who commanded the Body of Veterans mentioned above; and either out of Esteem for his Valour, or with defign to expose that Plebeian in a very dangerous Action, he gave him the Charge of attacking the D.H.l.10. Enemy's Camp. ' My Colleague and I, faid he

to him, intend to march against the Enemy.

While we draw all their Forces to this Side, do vou throw yourfelf with the Body under your Command into the narrow by-way in the Mountain which leads to their Camp. Push on quite to their Intrenchments, and try to make yourfelf

· Mafter of them. By attacking them in different · Places at the fame Time, we shall make a bene' ficial Diversion, and by dividing our Enemy's ' Forces, weaken their Defence.' Siccius told him he was ready to obey his Orders implicitly: ' But

e give me leave, fays he, to represent to you that the Execution of them feems impossible, and ex-treamly dangerous at the fame Time. Do you believe, continued that old Officer, that the Ene-

' my, when they left their Camp and came down from the Hill, did not fecure with a good Body of Infantry, the only Passage that can facilitate 6 their

their Retreat? Can I force fuch a Post with the Veterans only, without being supported by greater Forces? Such an Enterprize is only likely to cut us all off. Is it possible eight hundred Men fhould withstand the Enemy's whole Army, which will fall upon our Rear at the same Time that we have those who guard the Way through the Mountain in our Front.

The Conful, angered at Siccius's Remonstrance, replyed abruptly, that without pretending to act the General, his Business was only to obey his Orders: Or if he thought there was too much Danger in it, he would employ some other Officer, who without setting up for a Director, would bring the Undertaking to a glorious Issue. 'And you, mighty Captain, added the Consul with a jeering Scorn.

Captain, added the Conful with a jeering Scorn, you that have followed the Wars forty Years, that have been in fixfcore Battels, and whose whole

Body is covered over with Wounds, return to Rome without having dared to face the Enemy, and carry back to the Forum that eloquent Tongue

which is more formidable to your Fellow-Citizens, than your Sword is to the Æqui and the Enemies of your Country.

The Officer, enraged at the General's Reproaches, told him boldly, that he found he was refolved either to deftroy an old Soldier or shame him; but that one was much easier to do than t'other; that he would march up to the Enemy's Camp, and win it, or fall in the Attempt with all his Comrades. Those Veterans then took their leaves of the rest of the Soldiers, who looked after them as upon Men fent to the Slaughter: Happily for them they were under the Conduct of an old Officer that understood his Trade. Siccius went round about a tedious way, and after a long March descried afar off, and upon the neighbouring Mountains, a great Wood that feemed to stretch quite to the Enemy's Camp. He was immediately refolved to gain it: ' Cheer up, ' my Lads, cried he, making his way up to it,

' either I am much mistaken, or I perceive a Path ' that will lead us much more safely to the Enemy's ' Camp, than that which our General directed me.' It was not without Difficulty that those old Soldiers, cumber'd with their Arms, got to the top of that Hill. But they were no sooner there, but they found that they were upon a Height which commanded the Enemy's Camp, and they drew near to it under the Concealment of the Wood, without being perceived by the Centinels and advanced Guards.

During this March the two Armies of the Romans and the Æqui were come to an Engagement in the Plain. They fought a great while with equal Valour, and Victory had yet declared for neither Most of the Soldiers that the Æqui had left for the Guard of their Camp, not apprehending any Danger from behind, were got to the top of the Hill to fee the Battel. While they were fcattered about for the more easy Enjoyment of so great a Sight, Siccius, who had viewed them carefully, took Advantage of this their Negligence. He falls upon the Camp, furprizes the Guard, cuts in Pieces all that withstand him, takes the rest Prisoners; and having posted some Soldiers to guard the Camp, he next throws himself upon those that were looking upon the Fight at their eafe, and foon mafters Some who being at a Diffance had time to fly, ran immediately and got Possession of the hollow Road that led into the Plain, and where the Æqui had left fome Cohorts to fecure their Retreat. as Siccius forefaw they wou'd. The Roman Officer, who purfued them brifkly, is there almost as foon as they, pushes them hard, and drives them in confusion among that Body of Troops. All take to flight; the Soldier terrified does not perceive what a fmall Number he has to deal with; Fear makes them feem double in his Eyes; he runs for fafety into the main Body of the Army, and carries Fear and Confusion thither along with him: Siccius follows close, and adds to it. The Æqui seeing themfelves attacked in their Rear, give ground. After this it was not fo much a Battel as a general Rout. Some try to regain the Hill; others disperse different Ways over the Plain, and wherever they turn themselves they meet the Enemy and Death. Most of them were cut to Pieces; and none were faved but fuch as the Romans thought fit to make Prifoners, or that escaped by Favour of the Night, which came on during the Engagement.

While the Confuls were finishing their Victory Siccius's and pursuing those that fled, Siccius, full of Resent-Revenge. ment against the Generals, forms a Defign to deprive them of the Fruits and Honours of the Victory. He ascends the Enemy's Camp once more with none but his own Troop; cuts the Throats of the Prisoners; kills the Horses; sets fire to the Tents, the Arms, and all the Baggage, and leaves none of those Marks of Victory which were required from a General when he demanded the Triumph. He then marches away with extream Diligence, arrives at Rome with his Cohort, and gives an Account to the Tribunes of what had passed. The People feeing those old Men alone, and yet covered with the Blood of their Enemies, flock about them, and enquire News of the Army. Siccius tells them of the Victory they had gained over the Æqui, and at the fame Time complains of the Inhumanity of the Confuls, who, he faid, without Necessity, and only to fatisfy their Hatred to the Plebeians, had exposed eight hundred Veterans to Death, in all likelihood, unavoidable. He then related by what good Fortune they had escaped the Snares which the Confuls had laid for them. ' Nevertheless, added he, we took the Enemy's Camp, and cut to Pieces those that guarded it. Then we made our felves Mafters of the Straits in the Mountain; we drove the Equi out of them, and by our Valour paved the Way for the Victory of the Confuls. The only Recompence we defire is,

- that the Honours of Triumph may not be allow-
- ed to Generals who have made use of their Autho- rity only to destroy their own Fellow-Citizens
- without a Cause.

The Honour of a Triumph refus'd to the Confuls.

The People, who already were but very ill inclined to the Patricians, promifed they wou'd never confent that the Confuls shou'd have a Triumph. The Soldiers of those Generals, at their Return, enter'd into this Cabal, in Revenge that the two Confuls had deprived them of the Booty, which they had fold for the Benefit of the Public Treasury, Liv. 1. 5. The Confuls. under pretence that it was exhaufted. to obtain the Honour of the Triumph, represented in vain, that they had won a compleat Victory, cut the Enemy's Army to pieces, and taken feven The People, prejudiced against thousand Prisoners. them with the belief that they had endeavoured to destroy the Veterans, obstinately refused to let them return public Thanks to the Gods for their Victory, or enter the City with the Ornaments of the Tri-The Senate, whether out of a Principle of Equity, or whether for fear of fome new Commotion, did not think proper to make themselves Parties in this Affair; and the People, who looked upon this Affront as a Victory over the whole Order of Patricians, did in the next Comitia bestow the Quality of Tribune upon Siccius.

The Confuls accused fice, but they were cited before the Assembly of the and condemn'd. peius and A. Eternius. Year of Rome 299, l. 3. c. 2.

C. 28.

of those Sovereign Magistrates. ran upon the Business of Siccius; but their real Crime Val. Max. was the Constant Opposition they had both made to Plin. 1. 7. the Pomulgation of the Agrarian Law. The People fined them both, Romilius in ten thousand Asses, and Veturius in fifteen thousand. History does not inform us of the Reason of the Difference which the People made in their Fines: It was perhaps because Veturius had the greatest hand in the ill Treatment

The two Confuls were no fooner out of their Of-

This was the general Fate

The Accufation

People in the Consulate of their Successors Sp. Tar-

ot

of Icilius's Apparitor. What confirms this Conjecture is, that at the fame time a Law was made, with the Confent of all the Orders of the State, that any Magistrate shou'd have Power to lay a Fine upon such as shou'd be wanting of Respect to his Dignity: A Prerogative reserved before to the Consuls only. But to prevent any particular Magistrate D.H. 1. from abusing and stretching this new Authority, it so was provided by the same Law, that the highest fine Fine for such Crimes shou'd never for the suture exceed the Value of two Oxen or thirty Sheep; Copper Coins so call'd for their Impression, and struck in the Reign of Servius Tullius the sixth King of Rome.

End of the Fourth Book.

THE

HISTORY

OFTHE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OF THE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK V.

Ambassadors are sent to Athens to collect the Laws of Solon. Upon their return, the Administration of the Government is intrusted with ten Commissioners or Decemvirs chosen from among the Patricians. Appius, Head of the College of Decemvirs, becomes suspected by his Colleagues. To hinder him from being continued in the Decemvirate, they declare bim President of the Assembly that was to make a second Election. But he names himself for the first Decemvir, and the People confirm that Nomination. These new Magistrates are for making themselves perpetual. Notwithstanding the Opposition of the prime Senators, they obtain for themselves the Command of the Armies against the Æqui and the Sabines. The Romans decline Conquest, for fear of augmenting their Power. The Severity of their Government.

Government, their Pride, Injustice, but above all the Passion of Appius for Virginia, cause their ruin. Virginius, Father of that unfortunate Maid, being reduced to the sad Necessity of stabbing her with his own Hands, to secure her from the Brutality of that Decemvir, the Soldiers mutiny and return to Rome, where they obtain the Suppression of the Decemvirate, and the Punishment of the Decemvirs. Consuls and Tribunes are once more revived, and the People restor'd to all their Privileges.

TE have feen, in the preceding Sheets, Recapital Rome, jealous of her Liberty, shake off lation of her Kings; Monarchic Government turn'd the first into Republican under two Confuls; the Nobility and Populace of that infant Republic, thro the fame Love of Liberty, difunited and ready to part; the Tribuneship, which had been set up purely as a Pledge of their Re-union, become the Foundation of new Diffentions; and those Plebeian Magistrates, perpetual Makebates, pursuing and hunting down the brightest and most deserving Senators, and especially eager after the Ruin of the Confuls as foon as ever their Time was expir'd; infomuch that a Confular was to look upon himself as a Sacrifice of the People, and the Object of the Tribunes Fury. Such was the State of Rome, where it was then criminal in the supreme Magistrates to govern according to the ancient Laws. Yet the Misfortune that befel Romilius and Veturius before-mention'd, frighted not their Successors: Sp. Tarpeius and A. Haterius express'd never a whit the less Courage. Those gallant Confuls declar'd undauntedly to the People, that they might fine 'em as much as they pleas'd, or inflict yet more unjust Punishments upon 'em, when their Time was up; but that neither fuch Vexations, nor even the Loss of their Lives, shou'd ever oblige them to confent to the Publication of the Agrarian Law. So much Resolution, together with the Unanimity of the Senate, startled the Tribunes.

Both

Both Parties, equally tir'd with those continual Bickerings, look'd as if they were going to be reconcil'd. Not a word was heard about the Partition of the Lands, for some time. All Heart-burnings feem'd to be quite over, or at least suspended. But the Populace, ever reftlefs, only chang'd their The People View and Object: They return'd to the Terentillian demand a Law, and requir'd of the Senate, that instead of those arbitrary Judgments given by the Magistrates. a Body of Laws shou'd at last be establish'd and made public, as well for the Guidance of those at the Helm of Affairs, as for the regulating the Contests that daily arose between private Persons.

Body of Laws.

> The Senators were not against this Proposal: but when the Legislators were to be named, they wou'd admit of none to be chosen but their own Members; the People, on the contrary, infifted, that as their Interest was equally concern'd in an Affair of that Importance, fo they ought by their Representatives to have a share in so honourable an Employ. cordingly they deputed the Tribune Siccius and his Colleagues to go to the Senate and maintain their The Affair was debated with much Heat. and the Senators were divided in their Opinions. But nothing was fo furprizing as the Conduct of Romilius, that Confular whom the People had but a little before condemned in a heavy Fine. Instead of opposing the People's Pretentions, as was expected, he declar'd that without going about to frame new Laws, 'twas his Opinion they need only difpatch away Deputies to Athens, there to compile fuch of the Laws of Solon as were known to be most popular among the Greeks; that those Deputies shou'd take care at the same time to make themfelves acquainted with the Form of Government in the respective Cities and States of that Country; and when they were come back, Commissioners shou'd be appointed to make choice of such Laws as shou'd appear to be most suitable to the present Constitution of the Roman Republic: And may the • Gods

Deputies fent to Athens.

Gods grant, added he, that those Commissioners

· propose tous Laws equally favourable to the Liberty of the People, and the Authority of the Se-anate.

This Advice was equally well received by both Parties. The Senate, whose Right of naming those Ambasfadors no body disputed, was fully fatisfied that those whom they should pitch upon to make this Collection, would bring home nothing contrary to their Interests. And the Tribunes, seduced with the Hopes of feeing the Government of Rome reformed by the Model of a Commonwealth in which the whole Authority lay in the Affembly of the People, bestowed the highest Praises on Romilius. Siccius himself. tho'his Enemy, declar'd that in the Name of the People he forgave him the Fine which he had been condemned to pay. But Romilius generously rejected this Favour from the Hand of an Enemy. He openly declared, that he defired no other Recompence but Power always to fpeak his Opinion with the Liberty that became a Roman Senator: And that as to the Fine which had been laid upon him, being a Thing confecrated to Ceres, he should think it sacrilege not to pay it. The Senatusconfultum was then drawn and confirmed by the unanimous Voice of the People; and in pursuance thereof, the Senate fent as Ambassadors to Athens, Sp. Postbumius, A. Manlius, and P. Sulpitius Camerinus, with Directions to gather the Laws and Customs of that City, and of the other Republics of Greece. During the rest of that Year the State was pretty quiet. But the next Year, in the Consulate of P. Curatius Year of and Sextus Quintilius, almost all Italy was afflicted Rome with a Plague. The Conful Quintilius, four Tri-300. bunes of the People, and great Numbers of Citizens of all Conditions, died of it. The People difperfed themselves on all Sides to avoid it. Rome in this general Desolation became a Desart, and some Surprize was to be feared from the Æqui, the Volsci, and the Sabines. But the Contagion raged among them them too with the fame Fury; a Calamity that was general ferved instead of Strength and Defence to the Republic.

Year of Rome 301. Ambassadors return. demanded, and refus'd.

The next Year began with happier Auspices. The Plague ceased in the Consulate of P. Sestius Capitolinus and T. Menenius, and the Ambassadors returned that had been fent to collect the Laws of Greece. The Tribunes of the People prefently made warm Liv. 1. 3. Instances to the Confuls for the Election of the Com-D.H.l.10. missioners or Decemvirs, that were to be employed Decemvirs in the great Work of fixing a Body of Laws for the Government of the Commonwealth. Sestius was not against it in the least; but Menenius, who looked upon all Changes in a State to be pernicious, and who perhaps had not forgot the Injuries his Father had received from the Tribunes, put off the Election as much as he cou'd. He at first excused himself upon account of the Necessity there was of chusing first the Consuls for next Year. He said, that this great Affair being to be fettled under their Confulate. nothing ought to be done in it, till they were appointed, nay, and not without their Participation; but this was only a Pretence: he flattered himself that the Election of the Confuls wou'd fuspend that of the Decemvirs, or at least, that the Difference which might happen between them wou'd weaken the Authority of those new Magistrates. The Impatience of the Tribunes hastened on the Comitia, CLAUDIUS was chosen first Consul. This was the third from Father to Son in the Claudian Family that had been raised to that Dignity. All the Patricians gave him their Voices, in hopes he wou'd be no less zealous for the Power of the Senate than his Ancestors. T. Genutius was named for his Colleague. The Tribunes, after this Election was over, renewed their Pursuit and Sollicitations to the Confuls then in Office, to oblige them to proceed to the Nomination of the Decemvirs. Menenius, who made nothing but dreadful Predictions of the Innovations to be brought in, confined himself to his House under pretence

Appius Claudius Conful.

pretence of Sickness, and chose rather not to stir out of it, than be forced, if he went to the Senate, to propose there the Business of the new Laws. Sestius, on his part, tho' more favourable to the Tribunes, did not think it wou'd be decent for him to take upon him the Direction of fo great an Affair, without the Presence and Agreement of his Colleague. The Tribunes, who were very jealous of all these Delays, applied to Appius and his Colleague, the Confuls Elect for the enfuing Year. They found Means to bring them into their Interests, in all likelihood by giving them Hopes of having the greatest Share in the Commission for the creating of the Laws. After having made fure of those two Senators, whose Election for the enfuing Confulate gave them a greater Authority, they introduced them into an Affembly of the People, which they had convened on purpose, to take measures against the studied Put-offs of the Confuls then in Post. Applus mounting the Applus Rostrum, spoke so artfully, that without declaring makes a Speech in against the Senate he won the Hearts of the People. favour of The chief Heads of his Discourse turned upon the the People. Justice of establishing equitable Laws among all the Citizens, to the intent that Rome, fo long split into two Parties, and in a manner into two different Cities, might for the future make but one Common-He added, that he was convinced the Nomination of the Decemvirs ought not to be deferred any longer; that the Proposal ought to be made to the Senate forthwith; and that if his Election to the Confulate and that of his Colleague were any manner of hindrance to the Appointment and Authority of the Decemvirs, they were ready to forego it, and declared that they actually did fo, and they wou'd gladly facrifice even their Lives to procure for great a Benefit to their Country, as Peace and Union among their Fellow-Citizens.

This Discourse was looked upon by the greatest Part of the Assembly to be that of a true Republican, that sincerely loved his Country's Liberty. The People

People especially, who expected nothing like this from a Patrician of the Claudian Family, heard him with no less Pleasure than Surprize. Some Senators on the contrary, who knew the proud ambitious Difposition of Applus, very much feared that under this feeming Moderation and difinterested Outside, he concealed Defigns of a very different nature. But as this, after all, was mere Suspicion, the Patricians as well as the Plebeians gave great Praises to the Abdication he fo freely made of his Title to the Confulate. The next Work was to bring the Affair before the Senate. Menenius, trusting to the Engagements he had privately enter'd into with his Colleague, still feigned to be fick, in order to avoid convening that Body; but Sestius, won over probably by a Promise of being included in the Number of Decemvirs, broke his word with him. He affembled the Senate, and proposed the Nomination of the Decemvirs. The Opinions were divided, as usual; fome Senators, fond of the old Customs, were averse to all Changes in the Government of the State, and the Administration of Justice. But Appius, who had a strong Party in the Society, maintained on the contrary, that there was great Justice in establishing with the People's Consent, Laws that might be confrant Rules for the future to direct the Judgments of the Magistrates. And this at last was carried by Plurality of Voices. It was refolved to proceed forthwith to the Nomination of the Decemvirs, but this created a new Difficulty. The Tribunes of the People demanded in their Name, that five Plebeians shou'd be let into that Commission. All the Senators unanimously opposed this Pretension. They represented, that as the Decemvirs were to take the Place and the Authority of the Confuls, it was a thing unheard of, that common Plebeians, who were by their very Birth excluded from all Curule Magistracies, should be invested with the Sovereign Power. The Tribunes found plainly that the Senate would never give up this Point. After many Reafons

Reasons offered on both Sides, they at length defifted from their Demand, for fear the Nomination of the Decemvirs should he dropped entirely; and fo it was agreed that they should all be chosen out Decemvirs of the Body of the Senate; that those Commissioners created. should for one whole Year be invested with the Sovereign Power, without any Appeal from their Judgments and Decrees; that during the faid Space of Time there should be neither Confuls nor Tribunes; that the Authority and Functions of all the other Magistrates should be suspended during their Administration; that they should draw up a Body of Laws extracted from those of Greece, and from the ancient Ufages of Rome; and that after they had been communicated to the Senate and People, and had received their Confirmation, they shou'd always for the future be strictly observed in the Government of the State, and the Administration of Juflice.

Some Time afterwards, a folemn Affembly was held of the whole Roman People convened by Centuries. This Affembly was preceded by Auspices, and the other Ceremonies of Religion; they went then upon the Election of the Decemvirs. Applus Year of CLAUDIUS and T. Genutius were appointed first; Rome, and it was thought they deferved this honourable 302. Preference for the generous Abdication they had made of the Confulship. The Votes sell next upon L. Sestius, Veturius, C. Julius, A. Manlius, S. Sulpitius, P. Curatius, T. Romilius, Sp. Postbumius, all Consular Persons. The Senate hoped they had made choice of the most zealous Defenders of their Prerogatives; but most of them, to attain this Dignity, had entered into private Engagements with the Tribunes of the People. Thus each Party looked upon this Election as their own particular Work, and concurred jointly in it, tho' with Views widely Tho' Applus was the first, and in a manner the Head of the College of Decemvirs, yet he lived with his Colleagues in a perfect Equality T 2 leg. 1. 2.

& 3.

and good Understanding. He especially affected deration.

the most popular Behaviour; he faluted the meanest Their Mo. Plebeian that he met in his way; he took upon himfelf the Care of their Affairs and Interests, and procured them speedy Justice. Each Decemvir presided in his turn one whole Day. He had then the twelve Lictors, who walked before him with the They fucceffively dispensed Justice in the Fasces. Forum, which they did with fo much Equity, that the People, charmed with their Conduct, feemed to have forgot their Tribunes. Most of 'em prayed to the Gods for the Continuance of a Government fo full of Moderation; nay, there were many Plebeians who declared, that instead of restoring the Confulship and Tribunate, the best thing they cou'd do, would be to find Ways to make the Decemvi-

The Laws rate perpetual. The Decemvirs laboured with great compiled. Application that whole Year upon the Compilation of the Laws, which they gathered partly from the ancient Decrees of the Kings of Rome, and partly from the Laws of Greece, which one Hermodorus of Plin. 1. 34. Epbesus, who happened to be then at Rome, interpreted to them. When their Work was comc. 5. pleated, they proposed it in ten Tables, of which only a few Fragments are come down to us. Some Cicer. de relate to the Concerns of Religion, others to the Public Right, and the greater Part to private Per-These Tables were affixed up in Public, that every Man might read them, make his Reflections upon them, and communicate them to the Decemvirs, before they received the force of Laws. They were then carried before the Senate, where they were examined and agreed to by Plurality of Voices; and it was decreed by a Senatusconfultum that the Comitia of Centuries should immediately be called to have them ratified by the whole Roman People.

The Day of the Affembly being come, the Aufpices were folemnly taken, and the Laws read over again in presence of the Ministers of Religion. The Decemvirs represented to the People with great Mo-

defty,

defty, that they did not know they had omitted any thing which feemed necessary for the Preservation of Liberty, and the Establishment of that Equality which was fo necessary in a Republic. That however they would have their Fellow-Citizens examine their Performance carefully, and declare freely what they conceived ought to be retrenched or added; to the intent that for the future the People might live under Laws which they themselves might be faid to have Made rather than Approved. A Difcourse so modest and candid, had no other Answer but the highest Praises. The Laws contained in the ten Tables were received with the Consent of all the Centuries. There were only fome few particular Persons who were of Opinion that several Regulations were wanting which might make two other Tables, and that if they were added to the former ten, they should then have a compleat Body of the whole Roman Law. This Defect created a Defire to make another Election of Decemvirs for one Year more. The Senate and the People equally The Deapproved of this Defign, though for different Ends. cemvirate The People only wanted to keep back the Restora-continues. tion of the Confular Authority, which they were jealous of; and the Senate on their Parts were glad to be freed of the Tribunes, who were fo odious to them.

The Affembly being agreed, the Day was appointed for proceeding to a new Election of Decemvirs. During the Interval before the Comitia, the Senate fell into Divisions about that Dignity. Some aspired to it out of Ambition; others, who at first had been the greatest Sticklers against its Establishment, courted it then, but only in order to exclude those whose Conduct and Designs they suspected.

Applus pretended not to desire it at all; and to in-Appius's duce his Colleagues to renounce it, he declared pub-Ambition lickly, that having sully performed the Duty of good and Dissipation.

Citizens by the assiduous Labour of a whole Year, mulation.

e

d

r

T 3

& 3.

and good Understanding. He especially affected the most popular Behaviour; he saluted the meanest Their Mo- Plebeian that he met in his way; he took upon himderation. felf the Care of their Affairs and Interests, and procured them speedy Justice. Each Decemvir presided in his turn one whole Day. He had then the felf the Care of their Affairs and Interests, and procured them speedy Justice. Each Decemvir presided in his turn one whole Day. He had then the twelve Lictors, who walked before him with the Fasces. They successively dispensed Justice in the Forum, which they did with so much Equity, that the People, charmed with their Conduct, seemed to have forgot their Tribunes. Most of 'em prayed to the Gods for the Continuance of a Government so full of Moderation; nay, there were many Plebeians who declared, that instead of restoring the Consulship and Tribunate, the best thing they cou'd do, would be to find Ways to make the Decemvi-

The Laws rate perpetual. The Decemvirs laboured with great compiled. Application that whole Year upon the Compilation of the Laws, which they gathered partly from the ancient Decrees of the Kings of Rome, and partly from the Laws of Greece, which one Hermodorus of Plin. 1. 34. Epbesus, who happened to be then at Rome, interpreted to them. When their Work was compleated, they proposed it in ten Tables, of which only a few Fragments are come down to us. Some Cicer. de relate to the Concerns of Religion, others to the leg. 1. 2. Public Right, and the greater Part to private Per-

Public Right, and the greater Part to private Perfons. These Tables were affixed up in Public, that every Man might read them, make his Resections upon them, and communicate them to the Decemvirs, before they received the force of Laws. They were then carried before the Senate, where they were examined and agreed to by Plurality of Voices; and it was decreed by a Senatusconfultum that the Comitia of Centuries should immediately be called to have them ratisfied by the whole Roman People.

The Day of the Affembly being come, the Aufpices were folemnly taken, and the Laws read over again in prefence of the Ministers of Religion. The Decemvirs represented to the People with great Mo-

defty,

defty, that they did not know they had omitted any thing which feemed necessary for the Preservation of Liberty, and the Establishment of that Equality which was fo necessary in a Republic. That however they would have their Fellow-Citizens examine their Performance carefully, and declare freely what they conceived ought to be retrenched or added; to the intent that for the future the People might live under Laws which they themselves might be faid to have Made rather than Approved. A Dilcourse so modest and candid, had no other Answer but the highest Praises. The Laws contained in the ten Tables were received with the Confent of all the Centuries. There were only fome few particular Persons who were of Opinion that several Regulations were wanting which might make two other Tables, and that if they were added to the former ten, they should then have a compleat Body of the whole Roman Law. This Defect created a Defire to make another Election of Decemvirs for one Year more. The Senate and the People equally The Deapproved of this Defign, though for different Ends. cemvirate The People only wanted to keep back the Restora-continues. tion of the Confular Authority, which they were jealous of; and the Senate on their Parts were glad to be freed of the Tribunes, who were fo odious to them.

The Affembly being agreed, the Day was appointed for proceeding to a new Election of Decemvirs. During the Interval before the Comitia, the Senate fell into Divisions about that Dignity. Some aspired to it out of Ambition; others, who at first had been the greatest Sticklers against its Establishment, courted it then, but only in order to exclude those whose Conduct and Designs they suspected. Appros pretended not to defire it at all; and to in-Appins's duce his Colleagues to renounce it, he declared pub- Ambition lickly, that having fully performed the Duty of good and Diffi-Citizens by the affiduous Labour of a whole Year, mulation.

e

e

t

S

1-

y

e

;

ne

d

e.

uer

he

0y, T 3

it was now just to grant them some Repose, by appointing others to succeed them.

But his public and avowed Engagements with the Duillii and Icilii, that is to fay, with the Heads of the People, and the Favourers of the former Tribunes of that Name; the Pains he took to make himself agreeable to the Plebeians; his Affability and Moderation, so contrary to the Pride of which the Claudian Family was accused; all this gave great Uneafiness to his Rivals, and rendered him suspici-These latter, to make fure ous to his Colleagues. of his Exclusion, appointed him to preside at the new Election. And as it was the Cuftom for him that prefided in the Affembly to name those who courted the Post that was to be filled, they imagined that after the Declaration he had made of his renouncing that Dignity, he cou'd not have the face to name himself for a Candidate: Besides that it was a thing unheard of, that he who presided at the Election shou'd propose himself, excepting indeed an Instance or two of some Tribunes of the People, who upon the like Occasions had not been ashamed to abuse the Confidence of their Fellow-Citizens, Applus had no more Modesty than those ambitious The Day of Election being come, contrary to all Rules of Decency, he named himself for first Decemvir; and the People, ever the Tools of those who know how to blind them with an Appearance of acting for their Good, confirmed by their Votes fo extraordinary a Nomination. That Decemvir had the Cunning then to get the majority of Votes for Quintus Fabius Vibulanus, a Consular Person indeed, and of Manners too till then unblameable, but of a flow inactive Temper, naturally averse to Business, without Resolution, and uncapable of withstanding him in the Execution of the Designs which he was meditating. It was upon the fame Motive, that he next got the Election to fall upon M. Cornelius, M. Servilius, L. Minucius, T. Antomus, and M. Rabuleius, Senators very little esteemed in their own Body, but devoted to his Service; and by his private Brigues they carried that Dignity from the Quintians, and even from his own Uncle Claudius, a zealous Patrician, whom he excluded, as well as all his Colleagues in the first Decemvirate. Laftly, what furprised and alarmed the Senate, was, that Applus, forgetting his own Glory and that of his Ancestors, was not ashamed, out of Complaisance to the late Tribunes, to whom he had fold his Faith. to propose three Plebeians for Decempirs, pretending it was but just, that there shou'd be somebody in that College to take care of the Interests of the People. Thus he brought in Q. Petilius, C. Duellius, and Sp. Oppius, all three Plebeians, excluded by their Birth from those Prime Magistracies, and who attained them only for having borne Appius thro' all the Voices of the People, whom they led as they pleafed, and whom they had perfuaded to be for him, according to the private Agreement between them.

Year of Rome 303.

Approvs at length feeing himfelf by means of his Year of Distimulation and Cabals arrived at the Head of the Rome Decemvirate, thought now of nothing but how to 303. make his Dominion perpetual; he immediately af- of the Defembled his new Colleagues, who were all obliged cemvirs. to him for their Dignity. Then throwing off the Mask of a Republican, he represented to them, that nothing was more eafy than to retain the Sovereign Power for their whole Lives; that they were entrufted with a Commission wherein the Consular Authority and the Tribunitian Power were both united; that the Senate and People, always at variance, rather than fee the Restoration of those two Magistracies, which were equally odious to them, wou'd chuse to leave the Government as a Pledge in their Hands; that the private People wou'd by degrees grow accustomed to their Authority, and that to preserve it they must bring into their Tribunal the Cognizance of all manner of Affairs, without fuffering them to be carried either before the Senate or the Assembly of the People. That above all, they frou'd care-T 4 fully fully avoid convening either of those two Bodies, which might make them fenfible either of their Rights. or Strength. That there would always be found in fuch Assemblies unquiet Spirits impatient of all Dominion, and that to render the Authority of the Decemvirate unshakable, it behoved the Decemvirs to continue firmly united among themselves. That they ought to have a mutual Complaifance for each other; that the whole College ought to interest themfelves warmly for the particular Affairs of each Decemvir; and headded, that he thought they shou'd all bind themselves by the most solemn Oaths, never to interrupt one another in the Execution of their particular Defigns. As this Proposal of Appius agreeably flattered the Ambition of his Colleagues, they readily came into his Scheme. Every one applauded his Thought; all took the Oaths that he required, and unanimously agreed to omit nothing that might ferve to their keeping, as long as they lived, the Empire and Command which had been intrusted to them but for one fingle Year: A new Conspiracy against the Public Liberty.

Id. Ibid.

D. H. 1.

10. fub fin.

15th of May.

These new Magistrates entered into Possession of their Dignity on the Ides of May; and to strike immediate Terror and Respect into the People, they appeared in publick each with twelve Lictors bearing Axes among their Fasces, like those that used to go before the ancient Kings of Rome, or the Dictator; fo that the Forum was filled with a hundred and twenty Lictors, who dispersed the Multitude with a Pride and State insupportable in a City where Modesty and Equality always reigned before. The People cou'd not fee this Train and Parade of Tyranny without Indignation. The Comparison they made between the Moderation of the Confuls, and the pompous and haughty Behaviour of the Decemvirs, foon led them to regret their old Government. They complained in private, that now ten Kings were set up over them instead of two Confuls. But these Reflections came too late, and it was no longer in their Power to undo their own The Decemvirs began to reign imperiously and with a despotic Authority. Besides their Lictors, they were always furrounded by a Band of Fellows without House or Home, most of them blackened with Crimes, or loaded with Debts, and that cou'd find no Safety but in the Troubles of the State. But what was still more deplorable, there followed in the Train of these new Magistrates a crowd of young Patricians, who preferring Licentiousness to Liberty, made their Court to the Difpenfers of Favours in the most abject manner: Nay, and to gratify their Passions, and provide for their Pleasures, did not blush to be the Ministers and Accomplices to those of the Decemvirs. There was now no Afylum that cou'd be call'd fafe for Beauty and Virtue. Those unbridled Youth, under shelter of the Sovereign Power, tore the Daughter out of the Bosom of her Mother with Impunity; others, upon frivolous Pretensions, took Possession of the Estates of their Neighbours that lay convenient for In vain Complaint was made to the Decemvirs; the unhappy People were driven away with Contempt, and Favour and Self-interest fat in the Place of Law and Justice. If any Citizen warmed with a remaining Spark of the ancient Liberty, was fo bold as to express his Resentment, those Tyrants ordered him to be beaten with Rods like a Slave; others were banished; some were even put to Death; and Confiscation always followed the Punishment of the poor Wretches.

Tyranny of the Decemvirs.

The People, groaning under so tyrannical a Dominion, turned their Eyes to the Senate, from whence they hoped for Liberty. But most of the Senators, dreading the Fury of the Decemvirs, were retired into the Country. Those that staid in the City were not displeased to find that the Severity of the present Government made them wish for that of the Consuls; and they statter'd themselves the People wou'd gladly gladly give up their Tribunes, if they cou'd but be delivered from the Dominion of the Decemvirs.

C. Claudius, a Consular Person and Appius's Uncle, deeply concerned to fee his Nephew make himself the Tyrant of his Country, went several times to get to the Speech of him, to put him in mind how much he shamed the Memory of his Anceftors by fo odious a Conduct. But the Head of the Decemvirs, who cou'd not bear the Thoughts of his Remonstrances, eluded his Visits with different Pretences. C. Claudius cou'd never penetrate so far as his Apartment, and that old Magistrate found by Experience, that Tyrants never own either Relations or Friends.

Two Ta-

In the mean time those new Magistrates added bles added two Tables of Laws to the Ten that had been proto the Ten. mulgated the Year before; but they fettled nothing. in them about the Partition of the conquered Lands. It was particularly observed also, that in the two last Tables there was an Article prohibiting Alliances between the Patricians and Plebeians by Inter-Marriage, and that they had made an express Law of an old Custom. It was suspected that the Decemvirs established this new Law, and at the same time neglected to make any Regulation in the Bufiness of the Partition of Lands, only to perpetuate the Division between the two Orders of the Republic. They were apprehensive that if the Nobility and People should ever unite, they would turn against them that ancient Animosity which it was so much their Interest to keep alive. However, as the Authority of these Decemvirs was to hold but for one Year, it was hoped their Tyranny wou'd expire with that Term. But the Ides of May came, and not the least Appearance of any Comitia or of an Usurpation Assembly for an Election. The Tyrants then shewof the De-ed themselves bare-faced, and in spite both of Secemvirs. nate and People retained the Government, without any other Title but Force and Violence. All that gave them the least Umbrage were proscribed. Many Citizens voluntary banished themselves from their Country; some took Resuge even among the Latines and Hernici, and Rome now almost a Desart, was left a Prey to those Tyrants.

Every body secretly deplored the Loss of Liberty, but not one Citizen in the whole Republic was so generous as to attempt to break their Chains. The Roman People seem'd to have lost that Courage which before got them so much Fear and Respect among their Neighbours. The Latines and those that had submitted to the Dominion of the Romans, despised the Orders that were sent them, as if they cou'd not bear to see the Empire remain in a City which had lost its own Liberty; and the Equi and Sabines made Incursions quite up to the very Gates of Rome with Impunity.

Those eternal Enemies of the Republic taking Advantage of the Consternation the Roman People was in, raifed two Armies. The Sabines advanced along the Tyber to within an hundred and forty Stadia of Rome; and the Æqui, after having plundered the Territory of Tusculum, came and encamped near Algidum. Those two Armies seem'd to threaten Rome with a Siege. This News very much furprized the Decemvirs; they were obliged to arm on their parts, but there was no doing this without the joint Consent of the Senate and People, and they cou'd not but know how odious they were to both. They held feveral Councils among themselves, full of Trouble and Confusion. The Question was, Whether they should apply to the People, or the Senate; and what perplexed the Decemvirs most was, their Fear that the Year of their Magistracy being expired, the very Right of Convocation would be disputed with them, as being now but mere private Men. At length, after feveral Deliberations, as the Decemvirs were most of them of the Body of the Senate, and had Friends in it, they determined to call that, and agreed upon the Part that each of them flow'd act in the Affembly. Their Creatures undertook undertook to answer the Complaints of those that should demand the Abolition of the Decemvirate. They chose this Way, in hopes they should obtain a Levy of Troops by their Interest; and they thought the People, as much as they feemed enraged, cou'd not refift it, having with their Tribunes loft the Privilege of Opposition.

Year of Rome

A Herald by the Decemvirs Order immediately convened the Senate. They then went to it them-304. of felves, but they found none there but their own Adherents. The other Senators had thrown up the Care of the public Affairs, and were retir'd, as we faid before, to their Country Houses. The Decemvirs, fent Messengers thither to them, appointing another Assembly for next Day. Most of them returned to Rome, and came to the Senate; but with Views widely different from those of the De-Appius in a studied Discourse laid open cemvirs. the Necessity of taking Arms, to repel the Incurfions of the Æqui and the Sabines.

L. Valerius Potitus, without waiting till it came D.H.l.11. to his turn to give his Opinion, presently stood up. L. Vale-He was the Son of that Valerius who was flain at rius Potitus's Intre- the Head of the Romans fighting against Herdonius, pidity. and Grandson of the famous VALERIUS, surnamed

Publicola, one of the chief Founders of the public Liberty. Appius fearing that a Man of his Birth and Character, if he spoke first, would propose fomething contrary to the Interest of the Decemvirs, fternly commanded him to fit down and hold his Peace, and wait till Senators older than himfelf, and more confiderable in the Republic, had declared their Opinions first. ' I wou'd have done of, reply'd Valerius calmly, if I had nothing to fpeak upon but the Business you proposed. But the Liberty of the Republic is to be looked to first. Shall it ever be faid that a mere private Man, whose Magistracy is expir'd, imposed Silence upon Valerius? Must your Tyranny reduce a Senator to regret that Affiftance which the meaneft.

eft of the People used to receive from the Opposition of their Tribunes? But fince you and your Colleagues have usurped their Power, I appeal to those very Colleagues, not so much with Hopes of being relieved by them, as to lay open to the Eyes of the World the Conspiracy you have formed against the public Liberty. And you especially, Fabius Vibulanus, you that have been honoured with three Confulates, will you give Occafion for Men to fay, that out of complaifance to

' Tyrants, you betrayed the Interests of your Country?

Fabius, doubtful and confounded, knew not what to answer. But Applus transported with Rage, cried out to him once more to hold his Peace; and the other Decemvirs threatened to have him thrown down from the top of the Tarpeian Rock, as an Incendiary and Difturber of the public Quiet. A way of proceeding fo violent and fo extraordinary in a Body where all were indeed upon a perfect Equality, filled the whole Affembly with Indignation. M. Horatius Barbatus feem'd most provok'd at it. M. Hora-He was Grandson of that HORATIUS Cocles, who tius Barbain Defence of his Country's Liberty sustained alone tus's Intreupon a Bridge the Shock of Porsenna's whole Army. Pidity. The fame Republican Spirit that had been fo great an Honour to the Fathers, descended to their Children. The Horatius we now speak of, not able any longer to bear the Pride and Infolence of the DECEMVIRS, flood up, and publickly called them the Tarquins and Tyrants of their Country.

You tell us, fays he, of the War of the Sabines, as if the Roman People had any Enemies greater than your felves. I would gladly know by what Authority you convened this Affembly, and by what Right you pretend to prefide in it. Is not the Time of your Magistracy expired? Do you

onot know that the Power of the Decemvirate was given you but for one Year? We chose you to chablish such Laws as were fit for a free State to

' fubmit

fubmit to, and you have left no Footstep of that Equality which was the fole Object the Romans had in view. You have suppressed the Assemblies of the People, and the Convocations of the Senate. There is now no talk of Elections, neither of Confuls, nor of Tribunes. All the annual Magistracies are abolished: You have totally fubverted the ancient Order of Government, to build upon its Ruins your own particular Empire and Dominion. But know, that the Blood of · Valerius and Horatius, who formerly drove the · Tarquins out of Rome, yet runs in the Veins of their Descendants. We have the same Courage and the fame Zeal for the Liberty of our Country. The Gods, Protectors of this City, will grant us the fame Success; and I hope the People, no less jealous of their Freedom than their Ancestors, will never desert us in so just a · Caufe.

A Discourse so resolute quite stunned the Decemvirs. They knew not whether they should shew their Anger, or affect Moderation. to fosten the Minds of the Senate, represented that they were fo far from fetting up for Tyrants, that' they had called the Senate only to take its Advice upon the present State of Affairs. That if he had imposed Silence upon Valerius, it was only to oblige him to conform to the ordinary Method, which was, that every Man shou'd speak according to his Rank, unless he was particularly applied to by him that prefided in the Senate. Then turning to his Uncle C. Claudius, he bid him speak his Mind with all the Freedom that the Affembly cou'd wish for. He flattered himself, that the Interest of his Family, the Ties of Blood, and in some measure the Honour he did him in afking his Opinion first, would induce him to confute what feemed too harsh against him in Horatius's Speech. But he directed himself to a true Roman, and one that would have facrificed his own Children to the Prefervation

C. Claudius's Intrepidity.

Preservation of the public Liberty. He had even been very often, as we said before, at his Nephew Approx's House to endeavour to make him sensible of the Unlawfulness of his Government; but the Servants, by their Master's Direction, had always kept him from his Presence with various Excuses, and he had no Opportunity, but in so public an Assembly, to tell him his Thoughts fincerely.

That Senator observed first to the Assembly, that two Affairs of different Natures were then to be confidered of; a War which was to be carry'd on Abroad, and remedying the Diffentions which raged at Home with relation to the Government. That what was termed a War, was nothing but some tranfient Incursions of a few Parties of the Enemy, who ventured to come near the Frontiers of the State, only upon the Encouragement of the intestine Divifions that split the Republic. That therefore they shou'd first settle Peace and Union in the City, and that then only displaying the Standards of the Legions wou'd be enough to frighten away the Æqui, and the Sabines, over whom the Romans had already fo often triumphed. But that he doubted whether the People wou'd range themselves under the Enfigns of the Decemvirs, whom they justly look'd upon as private Men, who had usurped the Sovereign Power, and without either the Agreement of the Senate or Consent of the People, had by their own private Authority continued themselves in the Government of the State. Then directing his Speech to Appius: 'Can you be now to learn, faid he to him, how very odious fo unjust an Enterprize is to all good Men? And if you doubt it, the vo-· luntary Exile to which our most illustrious Senators have condemned themselves, does it not sufficiently shew that they look upon you to be no bet-' ter than a Tyrant? The Senate very impatiently bears that you shou'd rob them of their Authority; the People demanded their Right of Appeal, or that of Opposition which you have suppress'd;

all our Citizens call upon you, some for their Eftates, which have been made a Prey to your Ruffians, others for their Daughters which you have forced away to fatisfy your guilty Passions. whole City, the whole Nation detest a Magistra-'cy, which has destroyed their Liberty, abolished the use of Comitia, usurped the legal Authority of the Confuls, and put down the Power of the Tribunes. Restore to the Commonwealth, the Power with which she intrusted you but for one Year; · restore to us our ancient Form of Government; restore your selves to your own Innocence. Call to mind your former Virtue, and generously quit ' together with an unwarrantable Power the Name of a Decemvir, which your have made fo odious. · I conjure you to this by our common Ancestors, by the Manes of your Father, that illustrious Ci-' tizen, who left you so noble an Example of Moderation, and of Zeal for the Public Liberty; I conjure you above all, by your own Preservation and the care of your Life, which you must unavoidably lofe by fome ignominious Punishment, if you obstinately perfift to hold any longer the un-' just Power which you have usurp'd over your Fel-· low-Citizens.

Appius's

M. Cornelius's Pride.

APPIUS, covered with Shame at fuch just Re-Confusion. proaches, had not Power to answer. His Silence was looked upon as a tacit Confession of his Injustice. and even as an approaching Disposition to abdicate the Decemvirate. But M. Cornelius, one of his Colleagues, taking upon him to speak, and applying himself directly to C. Claudius, told him proudly, that those who had the Government of the Republic, did not stand in need of His Advice to direct their That if he thought he had a Right to give particular Counfels to his Nephew, he might go to him at his House; that in the Senate nothing was to be debated but the Affairs of the Public; and that they were now met upon the Necessity of taking up Arms against the Æqui and Sabines, who were advancing advancing towards Rome, and that he might fpeak his Opinion as to this point, without running wide of the Purpose in hand by unnecessary Digressions; Claudius, yet more provoked at the scornful Silence of Appros, than at his Colleague's infolent Answer. turned to the Senate: 'Since my Nephew, fays he, will not condescend to speak to me, neither in his own House, nor in full Senate, and I am so unhappy as to fee the Tyrant of my Country arise out of my own Family, I declare, Conscript Fathers; that I am resolved to retire to Regillus: I banish ' my felf from Rome, and make an Oath never to enter it again but with our Liberty. Howevers to fulfil the Obligation I lie under of giving my Opinion, with relation to the present Business, I don't think that any Levy of Troops ought to be " made till Confuls are first chosen to lead them.

L. Quintius Cincinnatus, T. Quintius Capitolinus, and L. Lucretius, all Confular Persons and the principal Men in the Senate, declared themselves of the fame Opinion, and one after another voted for the Abolition of the Decemvirate. M. Cornelius, one of the Decemvirs, apprehending that the Authority of those great Men wou'd draw the rest of the Senate after them, interrupted the Order of gathering the Suffrages, and asked the Opinion of his Brother L. Cornelius, with whom he had before concerted L. Corthe Speech he shou'd make in Defence of the Dea nelius's cemvirate. That Senator rifing up, never went as Speech in bout to justify either the Authority or Conduct of the Dethe Decemvirs: But taking a more cunning Turn; cemvits, he only represented that he thought it wou'd be expedient to defer the Election of new Magistrates, till they had driven the Enemy out of the Territory of Rome. 'Have those, said he, who prosecute the · Abdication of the Decemvirs with so much warmth,

• Abdication of the Decemvir's with 10 much warmth, • had any Promise from the Equi and Sabines, that they will put a Stop to the Progress of their Arms, till we have changed the Form of our Government?

You know, faid he, Conscript Fathers, the tedious Delays which our Elections require: First. there must be a Senatusconfultum to appoint the · Comitia. That Affembly, whether convened by Centuries or by Tribes, cannot be held till feven and twenty Days after Notice given. And before the e new Magistrates can be named, and confirmed by a fecond Affembly, and have taken Poffession of the Government of the State, and raised the Troops necessary to repel the Enemy, who will warrant us that we shall not see them at the Gates of Rome, and in a Condition to lay Siege to the City? Shall we go ridiculously and say to the * Agui and Sabines, Gentlemen pray fuspend the Progress of your Arms; let us be quiet till we have put an end to our Divisions at Home; the Senate is not yet agreed about the Form of our · Government; but when once the Confulship is refored, when once we have new Magistrates at the Head of our Armies, then get ye out of our · Territory without Delay, take Branches of Vervain, and return and fue to us humbly for Peace. unless you have a mind to feel the Fury of our Legions? Is fuch a Discourse fit to be heard in fo sevenerable an Affembly? And yet these are the D.H.l.11. natural Confequences of Claudius's Proposal. Mine is, that our Decemvirs immediately inlift the Legions, and march forthwith against the Enemies. Let us drive them from our Frontiers; let us force them, by the Terror of our Arms, to befeech us "to grant them Peace; and when we have secured ourselves abroad, then, Fathers, employ your Thoughts upon our domestic Affairs. Revoke by your Authority that of the Decemvirs, if they will not lay it down themselves with a good Grace: · Call them to an Account for their Administration;

elect new Magistrates in their room, and let the Republic return again to her ancient Constitution. But permit me to tell you, that in matter of Government Things must be done according to the present Conjuncture and the Necessities of the State.

The Creatures of the Decemvirs declar'd loudly for this Opinion. The younger Senators, when it came to their turn to speak, agreed to it, out of the Heat of their Courage, which made them long to come to an Engagement with the Foe. Some of the oldest Senators were of the same Side, in hopes that after the War was finished, the Abdication of the Decemvirs wou'd follow quietly of course, and so the Government return naturally into the Hands of the Consuls; and that prudent Magistrates by their Moderation might perhaps accustom the People by slow degrees to do without their Tribunes.

APPIUS, who with a fecret Pleasure saw that the Majority were of the Opinion of Cornelius, did then only for Form sake desire that of Valerius, on whom he had imposed Silence at the beginning of the Assembly. 'Is it possible, cried that Senator, that

t

0

.

d

e

y

we can bear to fee our Tyrants exercise their Do- Bold Dif.

minion thus in the Senate, and in the very Sanctu-course of ary of Liberty? My Mouth was stopt when my Valerius fpeaking cou'd have been of any Service, and now

I am allow'd to declare my Mind when the votes are already gathered, when the Majority has declared for the Opinion of Cornelius, and when all further

Remonstrances are hardly to any manner of pur-pofe. However, I will not betray my Confcience and the Interests of my Country. I will fpeak what I think of the Continuance of the Power which the Decemvirs have usurp'd, and I will do it with all the Courage and Freedom of a true Roman.

· I declare first that I heartly subscribe to all that

· C. Claudius has fo wifely represented to you, with relation to the Necessity there is of creating new · Magistrates before we take the Field. But since

L. Cornelius, the avowed Defender of Tyranny, has · endeavoured to turn so judicious a Council into

Ridicule, upon pretence that the Delays requisite in the Election of those Magistrates wou'd waste the Time that shou'd be employed in repelling the Enemy, I think myself obliged to shew you the Artifice that lies hid beneath this salse Reasoning.

'To convince you of it, do but call to mind the Measures which the Republic took about ten Years

fince, against the same Enemies, in the Consulate of C. Nautius and L. Minutius. You know, that while Nautius was on one fide fighting against the Sabines, Minutius, his Col-· league, fuffered himself to be shut up by the Æqui, in the narrow Paffages of fome Mountains. There was a Necessity to raise a new Army to relieve him; the Tribunes as usual opposed raising any Troops, unless the Senate would admir the Law concerning the Partition of the Lands. In this · Extremity, as neither Party would abate any thing of its Pretentions, recourse was had to a Dictator, whose Authority was superior both to the Senate and the Tribunes of the People. L. Quintius was chosen; he was fent for out of the Country; he returned to Rome; he raised a new Army, and in a Fortnight's time brought off that of Minutius, and triumph'd over the Enemy. What hinders onow but that we should follow so wife and so recent an Example? Let us chuse an Inter-Rex, as we should do if the two Consuls were dead. Let him name a Dictator; you will then have a lawful Magistrate; all this may be done in less than a Day. He will raise Troops by the Supreme ' Power belonging to his Dignity; we shall march against our Enemies out of Hand; and at our Return from the Campaign, that Magistrate, whose ' Power cannot last more than fix Months, will by his Abdication give us time to proceed at leifure, and according to the usual Forms upon the Elec-' tion of Confuls. If on the contrary you intrust the Command of your Armies to the Decemvirs, do you imagine those ambitious Men who have · usurped a Tyrannical Power, and in spite of all our

our Laws refuse so obstinately to deliver up the Fasces, will easily be brought to lay down their Arms? Believe rather they will turn them against yourselves, and make use of them to perpetuate their Tyranny. I demand therefore, in the extreme Danger which the Public Liberty is now in, that the Proposal I make to name a Dictator be examined, and the Opinions and Votes of the Senate gathered whether it shall be done or no.

Such of the Senators as abhorred or feared the Power of the Decempirs, declared themselves of this Opinion. But the Favourers of the Decemvirs cried out, that the Command of the Armies had already been affigned to the Decemvirs by Plurality of Voices; that it was an Affair decided, and that Valerius's Opposition ought to be looked upon only as one Voice the less in favour of the Decemvirs. Appius in confirmation of this Argument added, that the Affembly was called only to give order about the War, which the Æqui and Sabines made upon the Republic. That C. Claudius, Cornelius and Valerius had proposed different Opinions; but that of Cornelius having prevailed with the Majority, he order'd the Secretary to draw up the Senatusconfultum out of hand, committing to the Decemvirs the Care of this War, and the Command of the Armies. Then turning to Valerius, he told him with a contemptuous Smile, that if ever he attained to the Confulship, he might then have an Affair already decided revised over again. The Decemvirs arose after having figned the Senatusconfultum, and went out of the Senate, followed by their Adherents, who congratulated them upon the Advantage they had just gained over the opposite Party.

s

y

e

5,

11

ır

The Command of the Armies now allotted them Tyranny of confirmed their Authority, and made it yet more the Decemformidable. They employed it to revenge them virs. felves of their private Enemies, and they reckoned as such all those that did not submit to be their Slaves. Every Body in secret towailed the Loss of Liberty.

U 3

Liberty. L. Valerius and M. Horatius, who wou'd be wanting neither to the Republic nor themselves, gathered together in their Houses a great number of their Friends and Clients to fecure them against the Violence of the Decemvirs; and they never appeared in the City without a powerful Attendance strong enough to repel the Infult they had reason to expect. The Common-wealth was split into two Parties; of one fide was a noble Zeal for Liberty, and an inviolable Adherence to the Laws; of the other was an immoderate Thirst of Dominion, supported by the Magistracy and the Appearances of a legal Authority. The Animosity which raged in these two Parties gave Caufe to dread a Civil War. C. Claudius, Uncle to the Decemvir Appius Claudius, for fear of being engaged in it, left Rome, as he had declared in full Senate he wou'd do, and retired to Regillus his old Country. Other Senators and the Principal Citizens of Rome, who could not endure the Tyranny of the Decemvirs, and yet found themfelves unable to deftroy it, fought an Afylum in the Country or among the neighbouring Nations, Appius enraged at this Retirement, which was fo flagrant a Proof of the Aversion which was borne to his Government, placed Guards at the City Gates: But finding this Precaution only increased the Number of the Malecontents, he removed that Guard; and to be revenged of those that withdrew, he confiscated the Effects they had in Rome; with which he paid and rewarded his Ruffians.

A Conduct fo violent opened the Eyes of the People, as well as of the Senate. Both faw with Indignation, that inftead of wife Legislators, they had established no better than so many Tyrants. The People, jealous of and averse to the Senate's Authority, had at first with Pleasure beheld arising upon the Ruins of the Confulship a new Power, which allowed the Senators no Share in the Government. The Senate on their Parts did not oppose the Establishment of a Tribunal which delivered them from the seditious Harangues of the Tribunes of the People: And thus both the Orders of the Commonwealth had mutually facrificed their particular Magistrates to each other. The Decemvirs. in whose Hands their Authority was deposited, took Advantage of this Folly: Their Aim was to perpetuate themselves in the Government. And having now got the Command of the Armies, they defpifed Malecontents whom they no longer feared. The People, destitute of their Tribunes, were forced to lift themselves. The Legions were soon compleated: They were divided into three Bodies, Year of Q. Fabius Vibulanus marched against the Sabines at Rome the Head of one Army, and Q. Petilius and 304. M. Rabuleius were appointed for his Colleague and his Council. M. Cornelius was named General of the Troops that were to be fent against the Æqui, and with him went L. Minucius, M. Sergius, T. Antonius, and C. Duellius, all Decemvirs. Appius their Head staid at Rome with Oppius, and kept with him a Body of Troops which he placed as a Garrison in the Capitol, to maintain his Authority against the Enemy at Home, who was much more formidable than that Abroad. Thus meer private Men under the Title of Decemvirs got Possession of the whole Strength of the State, which under their Dominion retained nothing but the bare Name of a Commonwealth.

The People who composed the Legions, that is to The Arfay, the Centurions and the Soldiers, exasperated at mies of the the Loss of their Liberty, wou'd not Conquer, for Decemvirs fear of increasing the Power of the Decemvirs by getting them Victory. The two Armies were defeated almost without Fighting. They were not fo properly Battels as concerted Flights. The Army that was appointed against the Æqui lost their Arms and Baggage; that which was to fight the Sabines abandoned their Camp, and made a hafty Retreat to the Territory of Rome. The Soldiers dispersed different ways, and never rallied till they were out of fight of the Enemy; and the News of these Defeats was received at Rome with the same Joy that wou'd at another time have been shewn for a complete Viscour.

pleat Victory.

It was openly faid in the City, that 'twas no wonder the Armies of the Republic had ill Success under Leaders that had usurped the Command, Some called for Consuls; others proposed to chuse a Dictator as in a public Calamity, and the People languished for the Restoration of their Tribunes.

History of Siccius Dentatus.

Siecius Dentatus, the renowned Plebeian, that had been in an hundred and twenty Engagements, filled the Ears of the Multitude with nothing but the Faults which he affirmed the Decemvirs had committed in the Management of this War. His Opinion, and his Contempt of those Generals, spread over both the Armies. Scarce wou'd the Soldiers so much as give ear to their Orders. Some demanded Provisions, others Arms; and a general Discontent seemed to foreshew an approaching Revolt.

Applus, who took care to provide against all Events, fends Recruits and Provisions to his Col-He exhorts them to keep the Soldiers in awe by the Terror of Punishment; but that if they thought those Methods dangerous in the present Conjuncture, they wou'd not want Opportunities in that Campaign to deftroy the most mutinous by private means. He himself set them an Example: Siccius was odious to him upon account of the Freedom of his Talk, and the Power he had gained over the Minds of the People; he resolved to rid himself of him. To draw him out of Rome, he consulted him upon the Operations of the Campaign. He discourfed with him feveral times; and after having bestow'd great Praises upon the Advice he received from him, he engaged him, tho' a Veteran, to go to the Army that was fighting with the Sabines, pretending that he shou'd affift the General with his Counsels. And the fooner to induce him to make the Campaign, he invested him with the Title of Envoy or Legate: a Function

Function which among the Romans, according to D.H.1.11. Dionysius Halicarnasseus, was facred and inviolable, and which included the Sanctity of the Priesthood, together with the Authority of a General Officer, and Power of the chief Magistrates.

Siccius, free from Distrust, and with the Sincerity of a brave Soldier, gladly embraces an Opportunity of ferving his Country. He repairs to the Camp with all speed. The Decemvirs, instructed by AP-PIUS, receive him with outward Marks of Joy, and treat him with Distinction. Nothing is undertaken without his Advice; but this feeming Deference only conceal'd a private Design of making away with him. An Occasion soon offered. Siccius, with his accustomed Freedom, having plainly told the Decemvirs, he did not think they were Encamped fo Id. Ibid. advantageously as they might be, they commissioned him to mark out a new Camp as he thought proper, and gave him a Guard to go and view the Situation of the Country. But this Guard confifted only of the Decemvirs Ruffians, who had fecret Orders to dispatch him. Siccius having led them into the narrow Passages of some Mountains, they took that Opportunity to fall upon him. Siccius no fooner perceiv'd their base Design, but setting his Back against a Rock, that he might not be attacked behind, he received them with a Courage that struck a Terror into the boldest of them. That generous Roman, calling up all his ancient Valour, flew feveral of them, and wounded others: Not one of them now durst venture near him: They stood at a distance and flung their Darts at him. But as even this wou'd not effect their Purpose, the Villains climb'd up to the Top of the Rock, and thence knocked him on Siccius the Head with Stones. And thus this brave Soldier, Dentatus that had return'd victorious from fo many Battels, at last kill'd. fell unhappily by the Hands of Traytors hired by the Decemvirs. They then went back to the Camp, Liv. 1. 3. and gave out that they fell into an Ambush, in which c. 44. they had loft their Captain and part of their Comrades.

rades. At first they were believ'd; but a Band of Soldiers, that looked upon Siccius as their Father, going of their own accord to fetch his Corpfe, in order to pay their last Duties to it, perceived that the flain were all Romans; that they were all fallen with their Faces towards him; that they were stripp'd neither of their Arms nor Cloaths; and besides, that there was not one Man of the Enemy among them, or the least Footsteps to be discovered of their Retreat. All these Circumstances laid together, made them fuspect that Siccius had been murdered by his Guard. This Suspicion ran all thro' the Camp, and raised loud Complaints and a general Discontent. whole Army demanded, with the greatest Fury, that the Affaffins shou'd be brought to Justice. But the Decemvirs helped them to make their Escape; and to stifle all Thoughts that they themselves cou'd have any hand in fo horrid an Action, they gave Siccius a military Funeral, no less honourable than if he had commanded the Army in chief. These Honours fo extraordinary for a Plebeian, whom every Body knew they hated, fully convinced the Soldiers that Siccius was not murdered without their Know-The Army ledge. The Discontent of this Army quickly spread discontent- to the other Camp, and even to Rome. The Citizens and the Soldiers, the Senate and the People, publickly cried out against so infamous a Deed. All were ready to shake off the Yoke of so bloody a Rule, when Applus by a new attempt, still more odious and tyrannical, filled up the measure of his Tyrannies, and of the Aversion which all the Orders of the State had for him.

ed.

We have already faid, that by Agreement with his Colleagues he staid at Rome at the Head of a Body of Troops to keep the Inhabitants in Obedience to the Decemvirate. That Decemvir, who had brought into his own fingle Person the Authority of all the Magistrates, used to administer Justice in the The Story Forum. As he was one Day in his Tribunal, he faw passing by a young Woman of uncommon Beauty, of about fifteen Years of Age, going with her Nurse to the publick Schools: Her Charms, and the blooming Graces of Youth, immediately drew his Attention. He cou'd not help beholding her with a fecret Pleafure: His Curiofity increased the next Day; he thought her more lovely than before, And as the young Creature went every Day thro the Forum, he by degrees conceived a violent Paffion for her, which in the end proved equally fatal to himself and her too, He had taken care, the very first Day he saw her, to enquire out her Name and Family. He was informed that she was by Birth a Plebeian; that her Name was VIRGINIA; that she had loft her Mother, who was called Numitoria; that her Father Virginius then served as Centurion in the Army of F. Vibulanus the Decemvir, and that Virginius had promised his Daughter to Icilius who had been Tribune of the People, and who was to marry her at the end of the Campaign,

of Virgi-

This Account, so perplexing for Apprus's Love, only served to increase it. He wou'd readily have marriedVirginia himself; but besides that he had a Wise already, he had not forgot that the last Laws of the twelve Tables, of which he was the chief Framer, prohibited all Alliances between Patricians and Plebeians; and he had no room to hope for the Accomplishment of his guilty Wishes, but by the scandalous means of debauching the young Lady.

The Innocence and Modesty of VIRGINIA hindered him from opening his dishonest Purpose directly to her self. He thought it more proper to begin the Work by means of one of those Women of Intrigue, who make a private Market of the Beauty and Charms of Youth. He loaded her with Fa-D.H.l.11. vours, and after having let her into his Desires, he p. 710. ordered her not to name him, and to speak of him Liv. 1. 3. no otherwise than as a Man of one of the best Families in the City, and that had an absolute Authority in the Commonwealth. This Woman, by his Directions, applied her self to VIRGINIA'S Nurse.

She

She made an Acquaintance with her, tried to infinuate herself into her Confidence, and after great Preparations back'd with noble Presents, and Promises yet more glorious, the Wicked Wretch discover'd to her the Subject of her Errand. But the Nurse, equally prudent and faithful, rejected with Horror both her Gifts and her Proposals. Applus learn'd with Grief that it was equally impossible either to deceive or corrupt her. That Magistrate, surious and obstinate in his Passions, was however not disheartened: He had recourse to another Artifice, and laid a most detestable Scheme, which, if it succeeded, wou'd put Virginia wholly in his Power.

He intrusted the chief part to a Client of his named M. Claudius, a Man without Shame or Fear, and one of those that introduce themselves to the Ear of the Great, only by a Base Complaisance for their Pleasures. This Minister of the Decemvir's Paffion, entered the Public School where VIR-GINIA was, took her by the Hand, and was dragging her by Force to his own House, pretending she was the Daughter of one of his Slaves; and it was the Custom that the Children of Slaves were Slaves themselves to the Masters of their Father and Mo-The young Lady, overwhelmed with Confusion, defended herself only by her Tears; but the People mov'd at the Cries of her Nurse, ran to her Affiftance, and hinder'd Claudius from carrying her The impudent Villain immediately implored the Affistance of the Laws; he faid, he did not mean to use any Violence; but that he thought a Master might seize his Slave where-ever he found her, and called those who opposed the Justice of his Pretentions to appear with him immediately before the Decemvir; and with this he led the young VIR-GINIA to his Tribunal, All the People follow'd her, some out of Curiosity to see the Issue of so strange a Business, and others out of Affection to Icilius, who during his Tribunate had made himself very acceptable to the Multitude. Numitorius, VIR-GINIA's Uncle, having notice of what was doing. presently hasted to her Assistance, together with him to whom she was betrothed. Claudius laid open his Claim before a Judge that was himself the Author of the Villany. He faid, the Girl was born in his House; that she was privately stolen away by a Slave that was her Mother, and who to conceal her Theft, had pretended to be deliver'd of a dead Child: But that it had fince been discovered that the had fold this Girl to VIRGINIUS'S Wife who was barren, and who being uneafy at having no Child, had made her pass for her Daughter: That he was ready to produce undeniable Testimonies of what he advanced; but that in the mean while, till the Contest was decided, it was but just that a Slave shou'd go with her Master, and that he wou'd give good Security for her appearance again if Virginius, at his Return, still pretended to be her real Father.

Numitorius presently saw that there was some body much more powerful at the bottom of this Contrivance; but he prudently concealed his Suspicions. and represented to the Decempir with a great deal of Calmness, that his Niece's Father was absent in the Service of his Country; that it was very unjust to dispute a Citizen's Right to his very Children, when he was not present to affert it; that he asked a Respite but of two Days to fetch him from the Army; that till his return he wou'd keep VIRGINIA in his own House. That this care belong'd to him as being her Uncle; that he wou'd give any Security whatfoever for producing her again; but that it was not reasonable to trust the Daughter of Virginius in the House of such a one as Claudius, where her Honour wou'd be more in Danger even than her Liberty. He added, that what he demanded was conformable to the Laws, which ordained, that in a Law-suit, before a definitive Sentence, the Plaintiff

l

-Ho-f

Plaintiff shou'd not disturb the Desendant in his Pos-

The whole Assembly approved the Justice of Approx having caused Silence to be this Request. proclaimed, and affecting the Equity and Impartiality of a just Judge, declar'd that he shou'd always be the Protector of fo reasonable a Law, and which he himself had inserted in the twelve Tables, But that in the present Dispute, there were some particular Circumstances which alter'd the Case: that none but the Father cou'd claim Possession of her he pretended to be his Daughter, and that if he were present he wou'd allow him the provisional keeping of her; but that a Brother-in-law had not the fame Privilege in his Absence. That he was indeed willing to grant whatever time was necessary to fend for Virginius from the Army, in order to know his Intentions, but that Delay shou'd not be in prejudice of a Master that laid claim to his Slave; and that therefore he decreed that Claudius shou'd take VIRGINIA to his House, giving good Security to produce her again at the return of him who was called her Father.

The whole Affembly exclaimed against the Injustice of this Decree: Nothing was to be heard but Murmurs and Complaints. The Women especially, with Tears in their Eyes, gathered round VIRGINIA, and placed her in the midst of them. as if they meant to defend her. But Claudius, without any regard to their Shrieks or Intreaties, went to force her away; when Icilius, to whom the was promised, came into the Forum with Rage and Fury in his Eyes. Apprus, who was fearful of his Credit with the People, ordered a Lictor to bid him withdraw, and to tell him that the Affair was already judged. But Icilius, whose Passion made him regardless of Danger, being informed of Applus's base Designs, and looking upon him as a hated Rival: ' Thou shalt tear my Life from me, cried he to him, before thou shalt enjoy the Fruit of thy

Icilius's Speech against Appius.

vile

vile Artifices and insupportable Tyranny. Is it onot enough that thou hast deprived us of the two ftrongest Bulwarks of our Liberty, the Protection of our Tribunes, and our Right of appeal to the Affembly of the People? Cannot the Honour of the Roman Maids be fafe from thee? Thou canft not be to learn that VIRGINIA is betrothed to me. I expect to marry a Virgin and one Free-born; I will receive her from no Man's Hands but her Father's. If in his Absence any Attempt is made to do her Violence, I will implore the Aid of the Roman People for my Wife: Virginius will demand the Affistance of all his Fellow-Soldiers, for his Daughter; and both Gods and Men will be of our fide. But tho' I had not a Man to affift me, Juffice and virtuous Love will give me fufficient Power to prevent the Execution of thy unjust Sentence.

The People, equally moved with his Misfortune and his Courage, drive back Claudius, who takes Refuge at Applus's Feet. The Assembly was full of Diforder and Confusion. The Tumult increased by the Arrival of those that flocked to the Forum from all Parts of the City. The Decemvir fearing an open Revolt, thought fit to suspend the Execution of his Decree; and having caused Silence to be made: ' It is well known, faid he, Icilius only wants an Opportunity of restoring the Tribunefhip by means of a Sedition. But that he may have no Pretence of Complaint, I am willing to wait for Virginius's return till to-morrow. Let his Friends take care to give him notice. It is onot above four Hours Journey from hence to the · Camp. I will prevail upon Claudius to yield up · fomewhat of his Right for the fake of the public · Peace and Tranquillity, and to let the Girl remain at liberty till the return of the Man she imagines to be her Father.

Claudius, feigning to admit, tho' unwillingly, of this Delay, requested at least that Ieilius might give Security for producing VIRGINIA on the morrow. The People all round immediately held up their Hands, and every Man offered eagerly to be his Security. Icilius touched with the Affection of his Fellow-citizens, after having returned them Thanks:

We will make use of your Affistance to-morrow, · faid he to them, if Claudius does not defift from his unjust Pretensions. But for to Day, I hope • they will be fatisfied with my Security and that of all VIRGINIA's Relations.

Appros, tho' quite blinded by his Passion, durst not refuse such Security: But dreading Virginius's Return, he privately dispatched a Messenger to his Colleagues who commanded the Army, begging them to arrest Virginius upon some Pretence or other; or at least not to give him leave in any wife to return to Rome. He thought that he not appearing at the Time appointed, he might then with a good Colour deliver up his Daughter into Claudius's Hands: But his Courier came to the Camp too late. Numitorius's Son, and a Brother of Icilius had been beforehand with him, and had already given Virgimus an Account of his Daughter's Danger; and that Roman, finding her Preservation depended upon his Return to Rome, had obtained Leave and was departed before the arrival of Appius's Meffenger. The Decemvirs had no fooner received his Letter, but they dispatched some Horsemen after him to ftop him. Apprus had placed fome tod with the fame Defign in the Road that led from the City to the Camp: But all these Precautions were ineffectual. Virginius, who forefaw them, went out of the common Way, and came into Rome at a Gate directly contrary to that which went to the Roman Army.

He appeared next Day in the Forum pierced to the Heart with Grief, and leading in his Hand his Daughter all drowned in Tears. She was accompanied by her Kinswomen, who asked the People in the most melting Terms, whether it was fit that while while so good a Citizen ventured his Life for the Desence of his Country, his Children should be exposed to more barbarous Insults than if the City were fallen into the Hands of the Enemy. Virginius used almost the same Expressions to all he met, and conjured them to take his Daughter into their Protection. Icilius, quite surious with Love and Resentment, inveighed loudly against Approx's Lust. But the Tears of Virginia, her Youth, her Innocence, her Beauty moved the Multitude more than all the Complaints and Intreaties of her Family.

Appres heard not without extream Surprize that Virginius was in the Forum, with his Friends and his whole Family. His Return broke all his Meafures; and he feared with the Aid of the People he would forcibly oppose the Execution of the Decree he had refolved upon. To fecure himfelf against all Refiftance, he ordered down from the Capitol D.H.l. 12 the Troops that were lodged there under his Command, and they took Possession of the Forum. He then repaired thither himself, and having seated himself in his Tribunal with that Emotion which his Impatience to compleat his Crime railed in him, he faid he was not unacquainted with the Methods Icihad used to inflame the People; but that he would have them know he wanted neither Power nor Resolution to chastise those that should dare to disturb the Public Peace: And thereupon he commanded Claudius to open his Demand, and proceed in his Action. Claudius then faid, that no Body was to learn that the Children of Slaves belonged to their Masters; that as such he challenged Vira ginia. He at the fame time produced the Slave whom he had fuborned, and who, out of fear of her Master, declared that she had fold VIRGINIA to Virginius's Wife. Claudius added, that he did not want for other Witnesses if there were Occasion, and that he had hopes from the December's Justice; X that he wou'd not suffer himself to be moved by the Clamours and Threats of Icilius's Adherents, nor to be worked upon by the Tears of a young Creature, whose Fate he must own deserved Compassion; but who being born in Servitude, ought to return to it, tho' she had been educated like a free Person.

The Friends and Relations of Virginius, to deftroy these Impostures, represented, that his Wife had had feveral Children, and that if upon her losing them she had been minded to introduce a Stranger into her Family, she wou'd never have taken the Child of a Slave, and certainly not a Girl, when she might as easily have chosen a Boy. That her Kinsfolks and Neighbours had feen her big of this Daughter; that the Child when it came into the World was received in the Hands of her Relations. That it was notorious her Mother Numitoria did herself give Suck to young VIRGINIA; which The cou'd not have done had she been Barren, as Claudius falsely alledged. That it was strange that Impostor shou'd be so profoundly silent in such an Affair for fifteen Years, and shou'd never declare his Pretenfions till the young Woman was grown up to that wonderful Beauty which was the Cause of the Persecution she then suffer'd.

Applus fearing this Argument wou'd make too great an Impression upon the Multitude, interrupted him; pretending he had something to say himself; and addressing his Speech to the Assembly, 'VIR'GINIA'S Friends, said he, must not pretend to

- take advantage of Claudius's long Forbearance.
- For my Conscience obliges me to declare, that I myself have a long while since known of this cheat.
- ' Every body knows that Claudius's Father, at his - Death, left me Guardian of his Son. Soon after-
- wards I was told, that as fuch I ought to reclaim
- this young Slave as Part of the Succession of my
- Ward and my Client, and I then heard the same Witnesses as have given Testimony this Day. It
- is true, our Domestic Feuds, and the Hurry of Public

· Public Business, hinder'd me then from taking · due care of that of a private Person; but the Post

I am now in will not allow me to refuse him the

' Justice which I owe to every Man; Therefore I decree that the Plaintiff take home this Girl as his Slave.

he-

to

e,

ut

it,

efe

g er

ne

en

er

is

ld

at

lf

d

e-

or

or

n-

at

e-

00

d

F:

-

to

e.

I

t.

is

r-

n

y

le

It

of Virginius, provoked to the highest pitch at so unjust a Sentence, no longer kept any measures with the Decemvir. He made known to the whole Assembly, that he himself was the Contriver of the Imposture, which his Client acted; and addressing his Speech to him; 'Know, Applus, said he, I did not educate my Daughter to prostitute her to thy infamous Pleasures; I gave her to Icilius, and onot to thee: Cou'dst thou imagine the Romans wou'd fuffer their Wives and Daughters to be Liv. Dec. taken from them to fatisfy the lewd Passion of a 1.1. 3.

· Tyrant?

The Multitude, at hearing this, raised a thoufand Clamours sull of Indignation. Applus, almost mad to see his Crime discovered, commanded the Soldiers that surrounded his Tribunal to drive away the People. And you, said he, turning to one of his Lictors, go, force a Passage through the crowd, and make way for a Master to lay hold of his Slave.

The People, who always fear those that do not fear them, finding themselves attack'd by Appius's Soldiers, disperse, retire, and as it were deliver up Virginius's Daughter to the Decemvir's Passion. Then that unhappy Father, who sees with Despair that Innocence is going to be oppressed with an unjust Power, desires of the Magistrate, that before Claudius carries away his Daughter he may at least be allowed to talk a Moment to her in private with her Nurse; 'To the intent, said he, that if I can discover some Token that I am not her Father, I may return to the Camp with less Grief and Concern.

APPIUS

Appros readily granted him this Request, upon Condition however that it shou'd be in Claudius's fight, and without stirring out of the Forum. Virginius, pierced to the Heart with the sharpest Affliction, takes his Daughter, half dead, in his Arms; he wipes away the Tears in which her Face was all bathed, embraces her, and drawing her near to fome Shops which were on the fide of the Forum, Chance directed him to a Butcher's Knife; he takes it, and speaking to VIRGINIA, ' My dear Child. faid he, this is the only way to fave thy Honour and thy Liberty: With these Words he plunges the Knife into her Heart, and drawing it out again Daughter. all smoaking with the Blood of his Daughter: ' It is with this innocent Blood, cried he to Appius that I devote thy Head to the infernal Gods. What People were left in the Forum run to this difmal Sight, utter loud Shrieks, and detest the Decemvir's Tyranny, which has reduced a Father to fo cruel a Necessity. Apprus, from his Tribunal. calls out, in the greatest Fury that they shou'd seize Virginius. But he opens himself a Passage with the Knife which he had in his Hand; and being favoured by the Multitude, gets to the City Gate, and went directly to the Camp with part of his Friends and Relations, who wou'd not leave him in fo great a Misfortune.

Virginius kills bis

> Numitorius and Icilius stay by the Body of VIR-GINIA, shew it to the Eyes of the Multitude, and befeech them not to let her Death go unrevenged. Crowds flock to the Forum from all Parts of the City. Valerius and Horatius, who had so undauntedly opposed the Continuation of the Decemvirate. come thither some of the first, with a great number of young Patricians of their Party. Appros, fearing their Credit and Eloquence, fends them Orders to withdraw, and at the same time commands the Body of VIRGINIA to be removed from the Forum. But Valerius and Horatius oppose it. Ap-PIUS, exasperated with the Death of VIRGINIA, and

n's

f-

11

0

1,

es

d, ır

es

It

5.3

1

le-

to ıl,

ze

he

IT-

nd

ds

eat

R-

d.

he

ıt-

te,

er

r-ers

he

P-

A ,

nd

and the Contempt which was shewn of his Orders, advances with his Lictors and Troops of his Guards to seize those two Senators. But the People, urged to Fury, drive him back, break the Fasces in pieces, pursue him himself as a Tyrant, so that to save his Life he was constrained to sly with his Face covered, and to hide himself in a neighbouring House.

Valerius and Horatius place the Corpse of the un-Valerius unfortunate Virginia in an open Litter, and under pre- and Horatence of carrying it back to her Father's House till tius stir up the last Duties cou'd be paid to it, they shew it thro against the the high Streets to stir up the Resentment of all the Tyrants. Citizens. Men and Women all run out of their Houses to see this Funeral Pomp; the Men throw D.H.l. 11. Perfumes into the Litter; the Women and Maids, with Tears in their Eyes, put Garlands of Flowers All bewail her Fate, and by those mournful Prefents feemed to make a Vow to revenge her Death. The whole City wou'd have rifen that Moment, had not Valerius and Horatius, who managed this Bufiness, thought it more convenient, before they broke out, to fee what Virginius's Return wou'd produce in the Army of Algidum.

He entered the Camp, attended, as we faid be-Virginius fore, by part of his Friends, and holding still in his arrives at Hand the bloody Knife with which he had killed the Army. His Daughter. The Soldiers, having heard of his Missfortune, run about him from all sides; Virginius gets upon a small Eminence from whence he might the more easily be heard: His Face was drowned with Tears, and Grief for some time tyed his Tongue. At length breaking this mournful Silence, and raising his Hands to Heaven, 'I call you to witness, im- mortal Gods, said he, that Appros alone is guilty of the Crime I have been forced to commit.' He then related with Tears, the Plot which the Decemvir had laid to get his Daughter; and addressing himself to the Soldiers, who heard him with great Compassion: I conjure you, my Fellow-Soldiers, Liv. Dec.

Compassion: I conjure you, my Fellow-Soldiers, Liv. Dec. faid he, do not drive me out of your Company as 1. l. 3.

a Parri-

a Parricide and the Murderer of my Daughter, I wou'd with all my Heart, have facrificed my own Life to have preserved hers, if she cou'd have lived with her Honour and her Liberty. But finding the Tyrant only meant to make her a Slave that he might have an Opportunity to dishonour her,

Pity alone made me cruel: I rather chose to lose my Daughter, than keep her with Shame; but I wou'd not have outlived her one Moment, had I not hoped to revenge her Death by your Affiftance.

The Army rifes.

All the Soldiers, detesting so base an Action, asfure him they will not fail him, if he undertook any thing against Appius. But their Centurions and the chief Leaders of Bands resolved to extend their Resentment to all the Decemvirs, and to shake off the Yoke of a Dominion that was unlawful, and now grew into open Tyranny.

The Decemvirs that commanded the Army being inform'd of Virginius's Return, and of the Disposition of the People, fent for him with Defign to fecure him. But his Friends hindered him from obeying their Orders, and the Soldiers being gathered together in Parties, their Officers made them so lively a Representation of the Foulness of Approx's Attempt, that the Soldier wanted nothing but to return to Rome to destroy the Decemvirs. Nothing but the military Oath withheld them, and they thought they cou'd not leave their Enfigns and their Generals without offending the Gods, and dishonouring themselves. But Virginius, who burnt with Impatience to revenge himself of Apprus, removed Ibid.1.11. that Scruple, by affuring them that their Oath bound them only to Generals invested with a lawful Authority; and that the first Obligation which a Roman lay under at his Birth, was to facrifice his Life in Defence of the public Liberty. There needed no more to satisfy the Conscience of those Soldiers. They immediately flew in a kind of Fury to their Arms, took up their Ensigns, and under the particular Conduct of their Centurions, took the way to Rome. The Decemvirs.

Decemvirs, surprized at so general a Desertion, ran to stop them. But wherever they turned themselves. they found none but exasperated Spirits who breathed nothing but Vengeance. They reproached them with their Pride, their Avarice, the Deaths of Siccius and VIRGINIA, and with Appius's Luft, yet more intolerable than their Cruelty. The Soldier sternly tells them he is born free, and that he is going to Rome only to restore Liberty to his Fellow-Citizens.

The Army entered Rome about Evening, with-Continuaout making any Difturbance, and without fo much tion of the as a Soldier's stirring out of his Rank. They con- Revolt. tented themselves, as they pass'd by, with affuring their Friends and Relations that they were returned only to deftroy Tyranny. All the Troops march'd quietly thro' the City to Mount Aventine, and were resolved not to separate till they had obtained the Deposal of the Decemvirs, and the Restoration of the Tribuneship.

APPIUS, terrified with Remorfe of Conscience, and with this Revolt of the Army, durft not appear in public. But Oppius, his Colleague, who dreaded the Consequences of this Tumult, had then recourse to the Authority of the Senate; and contrary to the Custom of the Decemvirs, he convened it extraordinarily. Most of the Senators were not forry for a Commotion which might help to re-establish the Government upon its ancient Foundations. However as it was of dangerous Confequence to let the People fee that it was in their Power to do themselves Justice, and in order to keep the supreme Authority still in the Senate, they fent to Mount Aventine S. Tarpeius, C. Julius, and P. Sulpitius, all three Confulars, who demanded of those Soldiers severely, by whose Command they had left their Camp and their Generals.

Those Soldiers, perplex'd with this Question, remained for some time in silence. At length they broke it, and cried out all together that Valerius and

X 4

er, ofe I I

V.

I

vn

ed

ng nat

æ. If-

y he

e-10 W

1-

2-7d

- gy

r

1 1

Horaius shou'd be sent to them, and that they wou'd give them a true Account of their Conduct, Those two Senators were the Men chosen, because the Multitude looked upon them as the declared Enemies of the Decemvirs, and the most zealous Defenders of Liberty.

While the three Consulars returned to the Senate, to give an account of this Answer of the Soldiers, Virginius put them in mind that their Interest was concerned to chuse some of their Centurions to enter into Negotiation with the Commissioners they had demanded. He himself was immediately named the the first; but he excused himself from accepting of that Commission, by reason of the violent Sorrow with which he was oppressed, and which did not leave him sufficient Liberty of Mind to maintain the public Interests. The Army, upon his Resusal, appointed ten other Centurions, and to do Honour to their Choice, they gave those Officers the Title of military Tribunes.

Military Tribunes chosen.

The Army fent against the Sabines, followed the Example of that of Algidum. Numitorius and Icilius had been there, and raised the same Tumult among them. All the Soldiers, having also first chosen Leaders to command them, marched Colours flying strait to Rome, and joined the other Army. Tho' the Senate was not forry to fee the Authority of the Decembers abolish'd, yet besides that such a Defertion was of dangerous Example, the Frontiers were left exposed to the Incursions of the Enemies. Therefore Valerius and Horatius were hastened to Mount Aventine to bring the Soldiers back to their Duty. But those two Senators, finding their Mediation was become absolutely necessary, declared they wou'd not move a Step, fo long as the Decemvirs, whom they call'd Ufurpers, remained Mafters of the Government.

Those Magistrates, on the contrary, alledged, That they could not lay down their Dignity till they had published and passed the two last Tables of

Laws

Laws which were to be added to the first ten, and that that was the only Term fixed for the Expiration of their Magistracy by the second Establishment. which the Senate and People conjointly had made of it the preceding Year. L. Cornelius yet a warm Stickler for the Decemvirate, even advised that no Negotiation should be entered into with the two Armies, till they were returned each to their former Camp, and that upon that Condition, the Soldiers should be offered a general Pardon, out of which however the Authors of the Defertion should be ex-

.

,

IS

r d

of

V t

e

-0

f

8

3.

0

r

cepted. But an Advice so imperious, and so very improper in the present Disposition of the People's Minds, was back'd by no Body. On the contrary, the Decemvirs were made fensible that they must absolutely renounce an Authority which was expired, and which the Senate and People were resolved not to continue them in. The Soldiers in Fury threatened even to constrain them to it by Force; and they went over to the Mons Sacer, as to a Place where their Ancestors had laid the first Foundations of the People's Liberty. Every Thing at Rome was in that Commotion which usually precedes the greatest Revolutions. At length the Decemvirs, fearing they should be quite borne down by the Multitude of their Enemies, promifed in full Senate to depose themselves; they only defired that they might not be facrificed to the Hatred of their Enemies, and represented that it concerned the Senate not to accustom the People to shed the Blood of Patricians.

Valerius and Horatius having brought this Affair Mediation to the Point they wanted, repaired to the Army; of Valerius they were received by the Soldiers as their Protec- and Horators. The People demanded only the Restoration tius. of their Tribunes, their Privilege of Appeal, and an Amnesty for all that had left their Camp without Permission from their Generals. But first of all they obstinately insisted that the Decemvirs should be delivered delivered into their Hands, and loudly threatened

they wou'd burn them all alive.

Valerius and Horatius were not much more favourable to those Magistrates than the People themfelves; but they profecuted the Defign of destroying them with more Art. At the same Time that in general terms, they exhorted the whole Army not to be governed by cruel Thoughts, they cunningly infinuated to the chief Leaders, that when the People were in Possession again of their Rights, and when their Tribunes, their Laws and Assemblies were restored to them, they wou'd then have it in their power to do Justice to themselves; and that before the Negotiation was out of their Hands, they hoped to enable them to dispose uncontrolably of the Lives and Fortunes of their Fellow-Citizens, let their Quality be what it wou'd.

The People being fatisfied by their Officers, that even their former Tribunes cou'd not have more Zeal and Warmth for their Interests than those two Senators, trusted every thing to their Management. Valerius and Horatius returned immediately to the Senate; and in the Account they gave in Public of the Demands of the People, omitted their Refentment and Threats against the Decemvirs. They even feemed to hint, that they confented, every Thing that had passed under their Government shou'd be buried in Oblivion, provided their Tribunes were restored to them. The Decemvirs, alcemvirate lured with these false Hopes, went into the Forum, abolished. where they publickly laid down their Authority.

made a different Judgment of this feeming Moderation in the Army. Tho' he had deposed himself as well as the rest of his Colleagues, ' I am not igonorant, faid he aloud, of the Mischiess which are preparing for us. They only let alone attacking

Appius alone, stung with remorfe of Conscience,

" us till they have put arms into the Hands of our Enemies.

Valerius and Horatius, without troubling themfelves with his difmal Prefages, ran to the Camp to acquaint the People with the abdication of the Decemvirs, and the Senate's Decree for the Restoration of the Tribunes: ' Return, Soldiers, faid they, to your Country; come once more and fee your Do-" mestic Gods, your Wives and Children; and may this Return be happy and propitious to the Republic.' The Army gave them the most hearty Thanks, the Soldiers proclaimed them the People's Protectors, and the generous Defenders of the Public Liberty. They immediately take up their Enfigns, and exulting with Joy chuse the shortest way to Rome. But before they separated or The Tribureturned to their Houses, the whole Army and nate and People went to Mount Aventine, where they made Confulate Election of their Tribunes. A Virginius the Englered. Election of their Tribunes. A. Virginius the Fa-Liv. Dec. ther of the hapless VIRGINIA, Numitorius her Un- 1. 1. 3. cle, and Icilius to whom she was betrothed, were chosen first. C. Sicinius, M. Duillius, M. Titinius, M. Pomponius, C. Apronius, P. Villius, and C. Oppius, were appointed their Colleagues. An Inter-Rex was afterwards created, and, according to the Defires of the People, named for Confuls L. Vale- Year of rius and M. Horatius; the Reward of their success- Rome ful Cares for the Restoration of the Public Tran-304. quility.

Their Consulate was wholly popular, and the Divers Plebeians obtained from them, what they durst ne-Laws in ver have hoped from their very Tribunes them-Favour of selves. We have already seen that the Patricians the People, and Senators pretended they were not subject to the Decrees of the People in Assemblies convened by Tribes. The People, on the contrary, maintained that the Sovereignty of the State lying essentially in the general Assembly of the Roman People, all the Citizens of every Rank whatsoever ought to be subject to it, since they had a Right to give their Votes in it, each in his Tribe. This Dispute was often renewed between the two Orders of the Republic.

public. The two Confuls taking advantage of the absolute Authority they had then in the Government, got this important Affair decided in the People's Favour, and by a Decree pass'd in the Comitia of Centuries, it was delared, That all Decrees made in the Comitia by Tribes shou'd have the Force of Laws with relation to all the Citizens.

The Lex Valeria touching Appeals to the Assemtusconfulta bly of the People was confirmed a-new, and strengthlodg'd and ened with another, making it unlawful to establish preserv'd any Magistracy for the suture, from whose Judgple of Ce. ments an Appeal shou'd not lye to that Assembly. The Confuls added to this Law a Regulation importing, that the Senatusconfulta, which were often fuppress'd or alter'd by the Consuls, shou'd for the future be transmitted to the Ædiles, and preserved in the Temple of Ceres. Most of the Senators fubscribed to these various Regulations not without Repugnance. They faw with grief that two Patricians and Confuls, more Plebeian than the Tribunes themselves, under pretence of securing their Liberty, were absolutely ruining the Authority of the Senate. But the more equitable and less ambitious part of that Body, grown wifer by the Tyrannical Conduct of the Decemvirs. chose rather to give the Guardianship of the Public Liberty to the People, than to intrust it to the Men of Power who by their Credit might have an Opportunity of making a wrong use of it.

> The Republic by these several Regulations, and the Re-establishment of her old Magistrates, having refumed her ancient Form of Government, there was now in a manner nothing left of the Decemvirate but the Persons of the Decemvirs. We have already feen how odious they were to the Multitude: Virginius thought this a good time to profesure them; and in quality of Tribune of the People, he brought an Impeachment against Apprus, and declared himfelf his Accuser. Applus came before the Assembly habited in Black, fuitable to the prefent Condi-

Appius accus'd.

tion

fure that haughty Decemvir with a dejected Countenance, in the very fame Place, where but a few Days before he appeared furrounded by his Guards, and proudly awing the Multitude with the Terror of his Lictors armed with their Axes.

Virginius addressing his Speech to the Assembly, Liv. 1. 3: I accuse, said he, O Romans, a Man who made D. H. 1.

himself the Tyrant of his Country; who obliged 11. Diod.

you to have recourse to Arms to defend your Li-1. 12.

berty; who to fatisfy his infamous Lust, was not ashamed to tear a Roman Maid of free Condition out of her Father's Arms, to deliver her over to the vile Minister of his Pleasures, and who by a Sentence no less unjust than Cruel, reduced a Father to the Extremity of Killing his own Daughter to fave her Honour. Then turning to Applus, he told him, that without expatiating upon a Relation of all his Crimes, the very least of which deserved the highest Punishments, he only demanded what he had to say for the Sentence he gave against VIRGINIA: Why, said he, did yourefuse a Maid of free Condition her Liberty provisionally, while it was yet in dispute? If you cannot answer me,

I command that you be immediately carried to

Applus represented, that a Person accused had never been denied the Delays necessary to provide for his Desence; that it was a thing unheard of in the Republic, that any Citizen shou'd be imprisoned before he had been heard in a full Assembly; and that if the Tribune, contrary to all Laws, pretended to agress him, he appealed from him to the People; and that their Conduct towards him wou'd one day serve as a Testimony to Posterity, whether the Appeals about which the People seemed so jealous, were not only the Appearance of a Privilege, subject to the Cabals and Brigues of the Tribunes, or whether they were to be looked upon as the unshakable Supports of Liberty.

Most

Most unprejudiced Men thought this Demand but reasonable: But Virginius maintained that Appius was the only Person who ought not to enjoy the Benesit of the Laws, which he himself had violated in his Decemvirate. He accused him, that without regard to the Privileges of Roman Citizens, he had put many of them to Death; that he had imprisoned others; that he had even built new Prisons, which he used, with a barbarous Irony, to call the Houses and Abodes of the Roman People. Thus, faid Virginius to him, tho' you appeal a hundred times over to the People, I ordered that you be arrested, for fear so many heinous Crimes shou'd escape the Justice of the Laws. Accordingly he was that minute led to Prison, and the Tribune appointed him a Day for producing his Defence. His Uncle, C. Claudius, who had always been against the Decemvirs, and who had particularly detefted the Pride and Infolence of his Nephew, ran however to his Aid as foon as ever he heard of his Difgrace. We have already faid, that to avoid being an Eye-witness of the Tryrannical Government of the Decemvirs, and of the Miseries of Rome, he had retired to Regillus, the ancient Country of his Ancestors. He was no sooner come to Rome, but he appeared in the Forum in a Habit of Mourning, and made strong Solicitations for his Nephew's Li-His Friends and Relations joined with him berty. in it, and reminded the People, that it wou'd be a Shame to themselves in future Ages, that the Man who had framed their Laws and composed the Roman Jurisprudence, had been buried in a Dungeon with Villains and Robbers. Claudius befought every Man particularly not to fix fuch an Ignominy upon the Claudian Family; but rather to grant one fingle Man to fo many illustrious Citizens of the fame Name and Blood who begg'd him, than to refuse almost the whole Senate, for the fole fake of Virginius. added, that the People having fortunately recovered their Liberty by their Courage, there was now nothing nothing wanting to the Happiness of the Republic, but the restoring a Union among the several Orders of the State, which wou'd be best done by Clemency, and by forgiving Approx for the sakes of those who begg'd his Pardon.

Dionyfius Halicarnasseus tells us, that the Tribunes Appius's fearing Appius wou'd escape them by the Interest Death. of his Family, caused him to be strangled in Prison and then gave out, that that famous Criminal despairing of Mercy, had killed himself before the Day appointed for his Tryal. Livy, without mentioning a Word of the Tribunes, barely relates that Apprus, to avoid the Infamy of a Public Punishment, put an end to his own Life in Prison. Be it as it will, Sp. Oppius, his Colleague, had the fame Fate. Numitorius, another Tribune of the People, and Virgina's Uncle, profecuted him as the Accomplice and Affistant of Apprus. Besides these Articles, a Veteran Soldier complained, that without the least Cause he had ordered his Back to be torn with Whips by his Satellites. That Decemvir was condemn'd by the unanimous Suffrages of the People; he was thrown into Prison, and Dionysius Halicarnasseus tells us he was there executed the very same Day. The other eight Decemvirs fought their Safety in Flight, and banished themselves. Their Effects were confiscated and fold publicly, and the Produce carried by the Quæstors into the Public Treafury. Marcus Claudius, the Instrument that Ap-Plus made use of to get Virginia into his Power, was condemned to Death. But he had Friends who prevail'd with Virginius to be contented with his Exile.

Thus, was Revenge taken for the innocent Blood of the unfortunate Virginia, whose Death, like that of Lucretia, procured the Roman People their Liberty a fecond time.

Tho' the Punishment of the Decemvirs was owned to be just; yet the Senate cou'd not help being under some Consternation at the Death and Exile of the chief Men of their Body. They were especially displeased with the two Consuls, who had given them up to Virginius's Refentment, without shewing the least Inclination to soften the People in their behalf. Neither was it possible to foresee what Bounds the Tribunes, who were so closely united with the two Confuls, wou'd put to their Revenge: They feemed to be fo many new Decemvirs, that had a Defign to bring in the like Tyranny again. Duillius. who was one of that College, but more moderate. dispelled the Fears of the Senate: At length, favs he in a full Affembly, enough has been done for the Satisfaction of Virginius, and the Restoration of our Liberty. I FORBID that during the rest of the Year any more People be brought to Justice, or thrown into Prison, for this Affair. This Word I forbid, so awful in the Mouth of a Tribune, put a Stop to the Profecutions of his Colleagues, and repressed their Violence.

End of the Fifth Book.

be was thrown into Prifor at Diamilies

THE

HISTORY

OFTHE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OF THE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK VI.

The two Confuls, Valerius and Horatius, obtain from the People the Honour of the Triumph which the Senate bad refused them. The Tribunes form a Design of making themselves perpetual. One of them binders the Execution of it. Two Patricians are now first feen among the Tribunes. The Æqui and Volsci, taking Advantage of the Divisions that rage in Rome, plunder the Country to the very Gates of that City. They are routed and cut to Pieces by the Consuls Quintius and Aggrippa. Military Tribunes and Cenfors established. Sp. Melius aspires to the Sovereign Power. In a public Dearth he wins the meaner fort of People by free Distributions of Corn, and some of their Tribunes by Money. He causes a great Quantity of Arms to brought into his House by Night. His Designs are found out. Refusing to appear be-fore the Distator Quintius, he is run through with a Sword by Ahala General of the Horse, in the midst of a Band of his Adherents, whom he was stirring up to a Revolt. Mamercus Æmilius being Dietator, proposes, a Law for restraining the Office of Censor to one Year and a balf. C. Furius and M. Geganius, the Cenfors for that Year, revenge themselves upon the Dictator by trying to dishonour bim. The People take his Part. The Confuls, T. Quintius and C. Julius Mento, are beaten by the Æqui and Volsci. The Senate applies to the Tribunes of the People to get them to cause a Distator to be named. C. Sempronius Atratinus brings the whole Roman Army into danger of being cut to Pieces. An Officer of Horse named Tempanius succours the Consul in time, and prevents the Defeat. Tempanius, at his Return to Rome, is raised to the Tribuneship. He publickly undertakes the Defence of Sempronius, and prevails upon his Accuser to desist from the Prosecution be bad begun against bim. Nevertbeles, Shortly afterwards that Consular is condemned to a beavy Fine thro' the Cabals of some Tribunes of the People, exasperated, that in the Election for Questors, whose Number was increased, the Patricians had been preferred to the Plebeians. The Æqui furprize the Town of Vola. Posthumius is employed to drive them out of it again. He breaks his Word with his Soldiers, to whom he had promised the Plunder of the Town as soon as it shou'd be taken. To make them amends, a Tribune of the People demands, that a Colony shou'd be settled at Vola, composed of those very People that had help'd to retake the Town. A baughty Saying of Posthumius. He is killed by his own Soldiers. Plebeian Quaftors. The Senate make a Decree that the Soldiery, who till then had served at their own Expence, shou'd for the future be maintained by the Republic; and that, in order to defray this Charge, an Imposition shou'd be laid, from which no Body shou'd be excused. This Senatusconfultum is ratified by a Plebiscitum, notwithstanding all the Complaints and Protestations of the Tribunes. THE

HE two Confuls prepared to march against The Senate the Sabines, the Æqui, and the Volsci. But refuses the before they departed from Rome, they pub-Honours of lickly exposed the last Laws of the Decemvirs en-umbb to graved upon Tables of Brass. They then put them-the vidofelves each at the Head of his Army. Both obtain-rious Comed compleat Victories over the Enemy. At their Juls. return they demanded, according to Custom, to. have folemn Thanks paid to the Gods, and then to be received at Rome in Triumph. But most of the Senators, who cou'd not forgive them the Partiality they had shewn to the People, took a secret Delight in refusing them an Honour, which till then had always depended entirely upon the Senate. C. Clau- D. H. fub dius even upbraided them with being Accomplices fin. l. 11, in the Death of his Nephew Appius, whom the Tribunes had caused to be strangled in Prison before he was fo much as heard in his Defence. ' Did you not folemnly promise us, said he to them, that the Abdication of the Decemvirs shou'd be follow'd by a general Pardon? And yet no fooner had we obliged those Magistrates to depose themfelves but fome were murdered, and others constrained to banish themselves from their Country to fave their Lives. Appius, the Head of the Claudian Family, the chief of the Decemvirs, was strangled in Prison, without the least Form of Justice, and without so much as being heard in the Assembly of the People for fear that generous People, moved with the Tears and with the Defolation of aFamily that has deferved so well of the Republic, shou'd grant him a Discharge. And our Confuls, the Heads and Protectors of the Senate, they who ought to expose their very Lives for the Preservation of its Dignity, have basely connived at the Murder of the unfortunate Appius, and profecuted no body for it. The Senate, exasperated against the Consuls by the Discourse of C. Claudius, declared them unworthy of the Honours of the Triumph, and they were given to understand that it was very well for them they were not punished for their criminal Intelligence The People with Appius's Murderers. VALERIUS and HORA-Trus, provoked at fo ignominious a Refufal, cargrant the ried their Complaints before the Assembly of the Triumph to the Conthe People, and the Tribune Icilius there demanded fuls ... the Triumph in their behalf. Many Senators went to the Forum to prevent the Effects of this Cabal, and C. Claudius was one of them. Tho' he had always been averse to the Government of the Decemvirs, yet he cou'd never pardon the two Confuls for having delivered up his Nephew to the Fury of the Tribunes. He told the People, with great Courage and Boldness, that it was never known they shou'd take Cog-> never be free and quiet any longer than while one Order of the State forbore to incroach upon the Rights and Privileges of the other.

> nizance or decide about the Honours of the Triumph; that it was a Prerogative which belong'd entirely to the Senate, and that the Republic wou'd

Liv. Dec. But notwithstanding the Justice of these Remon-1. 1. 3. strances, the People decreed the Triumph to the Consuls: A new Enterprize of the Tribunes upon the Senate's Authority. They did not stop here. Those Plebeian Magistrates, who by their good Understanding with the two Consuls, had an absolute Power in the Commonwealth, resolved to perpetuate themselves in the Tribunate, and to continue the two Consuls in their Post: Another Conspiracy against the Public Liberty, little different from that of the Decemvirs. They covered their Ambition with the Pretence of the Necessity there was of keeping in the same Magistrates, at a time when the new Laws were not yet solidly established. But to remove the Suspicion that their Aim was to make themselves sole Masters of the Government, they infinuated to the People, that they wou'd also have them continue Valerius and Horatius in the Consulate.

By good Fortune for the Republic, there happened

The Tribunes are for perpetuating themfelves.

to be a Tribune of fo much Moderation and Ability, as to bring this ambitious Project to nothing. It was the fame Duillius that had lately by his Authority put a Stop to the Profecution of his Colleagues against the Adherents of the Decemvirs. He prefided that Day in the Affembly held for the Election of new Tribunes. He represented to the two Confuls, that the People's Liberty was gone, if the High Offices of the Republic were trusted above a Year in the fame Hands. VALERIUS and HORA-Tius gave him their Word, that they wou'd never accept of a Continuance in the Consulate. Duillius, to make the more fure of them, asked them publickly, and in a full Affembly, what Refolution they wou'd take if the Roman People, in Confide ration of their good Services in the Restoration of their Liberty, shou'd think fit to continue them in their Dignity. Both of them declared, that for the Pre-The Confervation of the fame Liberty, thy wou'd refuse any suls refuse Prolongation of the fovereign Power, as being con-to be continued. trary to the Laws. Duillius having got this Decla- Tear of ration from them, gave them Praises for their Difin-Rome terestedness, which were a kind of new Tie upon 305. them, and at the same time served to prejudice the People against the Defigns of the other Tribunes. Some Days afterwards the Affembly was held for the Election of new Confuls. Sp. Herminius and T. Virginius were raised to that Office. They maintained Peace and Union in the Commonwealth, by a prudent Impartiality between the People and the Senate. They then proceeded to the Election of the Tribunes. Duillius, as we have said before, presided in that Assembly, and upon this occasion acted in concert with the Senate. By means of their Credit and the Union of their Followers, five new Tribunes were immediately chosen, in spite of the Cabals of the old ones. These latter used all their Endeavours to fill up at least the other five vacant Places. Duillius still opposed it with great Resolution; but as they on their Side, by their Manage-Y 3

ment hindered the new Candidates from having the necessary number of Voices, Duillius to put an end to these contests, referred the Choice and Nomination of the other five Tribunes, to the five already chosen, according to the Direction of the Law, which expressly provided, that If upon a Day of Election the full number of Tribunes could not be chosen, those who were elected first should have Power to name their Colleagues. He then dismissed the Assembly, deposed himself, and the new Tribunes entered upon the Exercise of their Dignity.

Liv. Dec.
1. 1. 3. a
Tavo Patrician
Tribunes, r

Their first Business was to name their Colleagues, among whom every Body was strangely surprized to fee S. Tarpeius and A. Haterius, both Patricians, old Senators, and even Confulars; which was directly contrary to the Institution of the Tribuneship, which admitted none but Plebeians. There is no accounting for so extraordinary an Event, unless we will look upon those two Patricians as Deserters from their Order, that had got themselves adopted into Plebeian Families to capacitate them to be raised to a Magistracy which had the greatest share in the Go. vernment. But this is only a Conjecture; History gives us no Authority for it. Livy, on the contrary, infinuates that the five first Tribunes followed the Intentions of the Senate in the choice of their Colleagues: And perhaps Men of their Prudence forefeeing what fatal Confequences must follow to the public Liberty, if the fame Tribunes were perpetuated in their Office, privately joined with Duillius to get some Patricians into the Tribuneship. with intent to counterbalance the Power of the Plebeian Tribunes by their Authority, and in the Election for the enfuing Year keep them from renewing the Proposal of continuing the Tribunes in their Posts: which was looked upon as a Step to Tyranny, and the Destruction of the Liberty of the Republic.

The Trebonian Law. L. Trebonius, one of the Plebeian Tribunes, who plainly found that his Predeceffor Duillius had dif-

folved

folved the Affembly, and referred to the first five Tribunes the Nomination of their Colleagues, only to make way for introducing Patricians into that College, made heavy Complaints of it to the People. He gave himself entirely up, during the whole Year, to cross those Patrician Tribunes in their Functions, whence he acquired the Sirname of * Asper. And in order to prevent for the future, * Sour. any Tribunes, (gained over by the Senate) to do the like again, he proposed a Law which he got paffed, and which from his Name was called Lex Trebonia, by which it was ordained, that the Magiftrate who proposed the Election of Tribunes to Livy, 1. 2. the People, shou'd be obliged to prosecute it in all c. 65. the following Affemblies, till the Number of ten Tribunes was compleated by the Votes of the People. This Decree took from the Tribunes that were first chosen, the Right of naming their Colleagues themselves, which the Romans in those Days called Co-optatio.

M. Geganius and C. Julius, succeeded L. Hermi- Year of nius and T. Virginius in the Consulate. Livy in-Rome forms us, that after the Extinction of the Decem-306. virate, and the Death or Expulsion of the Decemvirs, the Republic enjoyed a feeming Tranquility, and the Union which appeared among the feveral Orders of the State kept the Neighbours of Rome in awe, and hindered them from renewing their usual Incursions. But this Calm did not hold long. The People fell again to complaining that the No- New Conbility, and especially the young Patricians, treated tentions them contemptuously. Their Tribunes cited some between of them before the Assembly of the People, into bunes and which they strove to bring the Cognizance of all the Senate. Affairs whatfoever. The Senate to maintain their Authority, opposed it stifly: And tho' the wifer Part of that Body did not approve this haughty Behaviour of the young Nobility, yet they would not give them up to the Persecution of the Tribunes. This Opposition, on account of the Jurisdiction and Y 4 Privileges

Year of Rome 307.

Privileges of each Order, revived the old Diffentions, which ran very high in the Confulate of T. Quintius and Agrippa Furius. It was still the fame Spring of Animofity, which upon every Occasion broke out afresh. Neither of those two Orders could bear the Thoughts either of Magistrates or Authority in the contrary Party. If the Confuls were formidable to the People, the Tribunes were no less odious to the Patricians; and neither of those two Bodies thought they could be free till they had pull'd down the other.

The Æqui and Volsci, informed of these Domeflic Contentions, thought it now their Time to begin their old Ravages, and took up Arms. The Confuls on their fide prepared to raise Troops. But the People, at the Instigation of the seditious Tribunes, refused to list themselves. The Enemy, meeting with no Obstacle, plundered the Country, and carried their Boldness so far as to bear off the Cattle that were grazing near the Æsquiline Gate.

The two Confuls, yet more provoked at the People's Disobedience than the Audaciousness of the Enemy, convened a general Affembly. QUINTIUS, a Man illustrious for several Victories, respected for the Purity of his Manners and the Wisdom of his Counfels, and who had been honoured with four Consulates, stood up, and couragiously told both Quintius the Senate and the People, that their eternal Diffenthe Conful tions would at length occasion the total Destruction reproaches of the Republic. That the Senate prefuming too the People. much upon their Dignity and Wealth would fet no Bounds to their Authority, nor the People to an unbridled License, which they cloathed with the Name of Liberty; and that each defended themselves against the Injuries which they pretended to be done them, only by greater Outrages. 6 One wou'd think, continued that great Man, that Rome holds within her Walls two different Nations contending with each other for the Command. When f shall we see an end of this Discord? When shall

we

we have one Interest, and one common Country? The Enemies are at our Gates: The Esquilia was upon the very Point of being surprized, and No-body stands up to oppose them. From the top of our Walls we behold our Country laid wafte, and our Houses in Flames and smoaking all round us: And we fee all this with a shameful Indifference, nay perhaps with a fecret Pleafure, when the Mischief falls upon the contrary · Party. What is there in the City sufficient to repair fuch Loffes? The Senate indeed fees at its Head Confuls, and the prime Magistrates of the Republic; but those Confuls without Forces and without Authority, groan at the People's Infenfibility to their Country's Glory. That People on their Part have Tribunes; but can those Tribunes with all their Harangues ever restore them what ' they have loft? Extinguish, O Romans, these fatal Divisions; generously break this cursed In-· chantment which keeps you buried in a fcandalous Inaction. Open your Eyes, and confider the Maangement of those ambitious Men, who to make themselves powerful in their Party, study nothing but how they may foment Division in the Commonwealth. And if you yet can call to mind ' your ancient Valour, march out of Rome with vour Confuls, and I devote my Head to the most cruel Punishments, if in a few Days I do not drive away those that plunder your Lands, and remove the War into the very Heart of their · Country.

Never, fays Livy, were the People more pleafed Dec. 1 1. even with the flattering Speeches of a Tribune, than 3. c. 69. they were with the severe Reproaches of this generous Consul. The Senate was touch'd with them no less; the most virtuous Men of that Body confessed, that those who had preceded him in that Dignity had either misused the People, to make themselves agreeable to the Senate, or else betrayed the Interests of their own Body to win Favour of the People; but that T. QUINTIUS appeared to have nothing at all at Heart but the Union of all the Orders, and the Majesty of the Roman Name.

The Confuls beat the Æqui and Volfci.

The Confuls and Tribunes, the Senate and People concurred unanimously in taking Arms. The Contention now was, which shou'd appear most forward. All the Youth offered themselves in Crowds to be inlifted. The Levies were quickly made; each Cohort chose its Officers, and two Senators were fet at their Head; and all this was done with fo much Diligence and Expedition, that that very Day the Enfigns were taken out of the Treasury and the Army marched ten Miles on their way. The Confuls next Day met and furprifed the Enemy at unawares. The Fight however proved to be bloody; the Aqui and Volsci fought with great Valour; the left Wing of the Romans gave ground, FURIUS AGRIPPA, who led that Body, finding the Heat of his Soldiers began to cool, fnatched an Enfign from an Officer that bore it, and threw it into the middle of a Cohort of the Enemies. The Romans flew into the midst of them to recover it, and thereby put the Enemy into Disorder, and gave the first Turn to the Battel. QUINTIUS had been no less fuccessful than his Colleague. The Æqui and Volsci, beaten on both sides, retired into their Camp. The Confuls invested it, and forced it Sword in hand. A great Number of Æqui and Volsci were cut to pieces; the rest sled. The Romans, now lest sole Masters of the Camp, found a great Booty in it, and then returned to Rome laden with the Enemy's Spoils, and with those which they had got in the Territory of Rome.

A Victory so sudden made the People sensible of their own Strength, and the Need which the Senate had of them: This made their Ambition and their Pretensions greater than ever. They grew every Day more untractable and more enterprising. Those Claims of who had acquired Wealth, or distinguished them-

the Plebei-felves by their Valour, demanded to have the Law

fo

fo injurious to the People for prohibiting all Intermarriage between them and Patrician Families abolished, as a Remnant of the Tyranny of the Decem-The Tribunes, ever turbulent, revived the Affair of the Partition of the Lands; others publickly averred, that fince Laws had been established equal in respect to all the Citizens, the Offices ought also to be common to them all; and many of the Heads of the People already fet their Eyes upon the Confulfhip itself, which tell then had been referved to the first Order. Nine of the Tribunes proposed in a full Assembly, that a new Law shou'd D. H. 1. be made to admit Plebeians into the Consulship for 11. Liv. 1, the future. C. Canuleius at the fame time demanded, that by a Decree of the People that Law in the twelve Tables shou'd be revoked, which forbad the Patricians from intermarrying with Plebeian Families. M. Genucius and Caius Curtius, who were Confuls that Year, tried to keep off these new Propofals, under pretence they had received Advice, that the Æqui and Volsci were preparing to renew the War. These foreign Wars were the Senate's usual Expedients; and they hardly ever had Peace with their own Citizens, but when they had them out of Rome, and were fighting abroad with the Enemies of their Country. The two Confuls, in in this view, order Levies to be made, and proclaim that every Man be ready with his Arms. But Canuleius plainly faw the Artifice. 'Whether the Canulei-

New of this War be true, faid he, directing his us's Speech Speech to the Confuls, or whether it be only a against the false Rumour spread abroad for nothing but a Co-distinction between lour to draw the People out of the City: I de-the Nobles clare, as Tribune, that this People, who have and the already so often spilt their Blood in our Country's Commons.

· Cause, is again ready to follow their Consuls and their Generals, if they are restored to their Liberty, and to that natural Right of being allowed to unite themselves with you by mutual Alliances;

f and if the hope of honours, and the entrance into " the

the chief Offices be open indifferently to all the Citizens of Merit. But if you perfift in your Refolution of maintaining the Law of the Decemvirs touching Marriages; if you continue to treat us s like Strangers, in our own Country; if you account the People unworthy of your Alliance, and s if you refuse them the Privilege of raising to the Consulate such as they judge most worthy, withs out obliging them to confine their Choice only to the Senate; in a word, if you do not remove the Distinction of Nobles and Plebeians, so odious in a Commonwealth; and if there be any other Nobility for the future, but what is due to Virtue honoured with Magistracies common to all the Citizens: Talk of Wars as much as ever you please; s paint in you ordinary Discourses the League and Power of our Enemies ten times more dreadful than you do now, order your Tribunal, if you think fit, to be brought into the Forum in order to make Levies; I declare that this People whom you fo much dispise, and to whom you are nevertheless obliged for all your Victories, shall never more inlift themselves; not a Man shall appear to take Arms, and you shall never more find a Plebeian that will expose his Life for imperious Mafters who are glad to affociate us with themselves in the Dangers of War, but who in Peace think to exclude us from the Rewards due to Valour.

The Confuls were the more alarmed at the Tribune's Boldness, because they durst not call the Senate, in which the People had their declared Favourers, who gave the Tribune an Account of every thing that past, So that those two Magistrates were forced to hold particular Councils with the Senators of their Party. They represented, that it was impossible to bear any longer with the Enterprizes of the Tribunes, and that they must resolve either to suppress the Senate or abolish that popular Magistracy, the Source of eternal Contentions between

the

and from the sweetest Fruits of Victory.

the Senate and the People. C. Claudius the Decemvir's Uncle, and who had received from his Ancestors, as it were by Succession, an hereditary Hatred to the Faction of the People, spoke first, and gave it as his Opinion, that they shou'd rather have recourse even to Arms, than yield the Dignity of the Confulship to the People, and that without Distinction either of private Men or Magistrates, they ought to treat as Public Enemies all that shou'd go about to change the Form of the Government. But T. Quintius, who was more moderate, and who apprehended these Contests might be inflamed into a Civil War, remonstrated, that there were among the Plebeians a great many Officers of extraordinary Merit, who had acquired great Glory in the Wars. That it was but reasonable to give some Satisfaction to fo generous a People, and that it was indeed but common Prudence in the Senate in this conjuncture to give up part of its Prerogatives to fave the

The Majority of the Assembly declared themselves of his Opinion. C. Claudius rising up again; I yield, said he, to Plurality of Voices; but since you think it proper to admit Plebeians into the Government, let us endeavour to satisfy this rest- less People, without however debasing the Majefty of the Consulship. And in order to reconcile Origin of two things that seem so opposite, I propose that the Miliinstead of Consuls, we elect such a Number of tary Trimilitary Tribunes as shall be agreed upon, to be chosen equally out of the Senate and the People, D.H.I. 11; who shall be invested with the Consular Power.

The People by this means will be fatisfied; and the Confulate in more favourable Times may refume its ancient Splendor and Majefty. Great Praises were given to Claudius and all joined in the Praises were given to Claudius, and all joined in the Policy Proposal. Then that ancient Senator addressing his of C. Clau-Speech to M. Genutius, first Consul: In order to dius. In convene the Senate, fend for the Tribunes of the People; and when the Affembly is form'd, declare that you invite all who love their Country to speak their ' Minds freely with relation to the new Laws which the People demands. Then gather the Opinions; and instead of beginning with T. Quintius, myfelf, or the most ancient Senators, according to custom, grant that Honour to Valerius and Horatius, as you have a Right to do as Conful: And by that means we shall learn the Sentiments of those Favourers of the People, who have fold their Faith to the Tribunes. Ithen will stand up and answer what they fay, which I will do without fparing them, and with all my Might oppose the · Abolition of the Law of Marriages and the Election of a Plebeian to be Conful. Then ask the Opinion of your Brother, T. Genutius, and let that wife Senator, under pretence of trying to reconcile the different Interests of the People, and the Senate, propose as of his own Motion to suspend the · Election of Confuls, and in their stead to create Military Tribunes, and let him include in his Advice the Abolition of the Law relating to Marriages. I will oppose this as much as the other, but you and your Colleague, and all you the chief of the Senate, out of feeming Favour to the People, fhall declare for the Advice of your Brother. · People shall be obliged to your Family for this Concession, and the Tribunes will infallibly join in with you, if for nothing but to triumph over my Opposition.

D.H.I.II. All approved of this Expedient; each agreed upon the Part he should act; the Consuls affembled the Senate, and desired Canuleius and the other Tribunes to be at it. The Day being come, and the Assembly formed, Canuleius, instead of laying forth the Justice and Usefulness of the Laws he proposed, ran wholly into bitter Complaints against the two Consuls, for holding secret Councils, in Prejudice of the People's Interests, without calling to them the best Men in the Senate, and especially Valerius

Valerius and Horatius who had done so great a Service to the Republic in the Abolition of the Decemvirate, which ought to be look'd upon as their Work.

The Conful Genutius replied, that they had affembled some ancient Senators, only to consult with them, whether it would be best to convene the Senate inftantly about the new Laws, or to defer it till the end of the Campaign. That if they did not fummon Valerius and Horatius with the oldest Senators to that Council, it was only to avoid making the People suspect they had changed their Party. And to convince you, added Genutius, that my · Colleague and I behave our felves in this Affair without the least Partiality, we shall only give vou this one Proof of it, namely, that tho' the first Opinions are usually of very great weight, and it has been the Custom for the Confuls to ask that of the oldest Senators first, yet as you do not · believe them to be Friends to the People, we will now change that Method, and begin with · Valerius and Horatius.' Then addressing himself to Valerius he invited him first to declare his Opinion.

Valerius began with expatiating very much upon his own Services to the People, and upon those of his Family. He added, that he thought no State could be called Free whose Citizens did not all live in a perfect Equality. He concluded with giving it as his Opinion, that the Plebeians ought to be excluded from the Confulate no longer; but at the fame Time he exhorted the Tribunes of the People to defift from the Opposition they had form'd against the levy of Troops, which the Confuls wanted to make, provided those Magistrates would engage to proceed to the Publication of the Laws at the end of the Campaign. Horatius, whose Opinion was asked next, spoke much to the same Purpose: And he too declared for marching first against the Enemy; but that after the War should be happily concluded, the Consuls, the first thing they did, shou'd bring into the Assembly of the People the Senatus-consultum, for empowering them to deliberate an Affair of that great Importance.

This Advice raised great Murmurs in the Assembly. The Senators, who cou'd not agree to admit Plebeians into the Consulate, thought they shou'd gain a great Point, if they cou'd put off the Deliberation. Those on the contrary who savoured the People, cou'd not bear this Delay, and maintained, that the Senatusconsultum ought at least to be signed before they separated.

The Consuls then ask'd the Opinion of C. Claudius, who, as they had before agreed, spoke with great Courage and Strength against these new Pretensions of the People. He recalled to their Memory all the various Attempts they had made upon the Senate's Authority, ever fince their Retreat upon dius's the Mons Sacer. 'This restless and inconstant People, faid he, wou'd needs have their particular Magistrates; and for the sake of Peace we granted them Tribunes. They then required Decemvirs, and we confented also to their Creation. They foon grew disgusted with those Magistrates, and ut of regard to them we subscribed to their De-pofal. Nay, we did more; for the fake of Peace we connived at the violent Deaths of fome of them.

and the Banishment of others. Lastly, in these our Days we have feen two of our Confuls, more popular than the very Tribunes themselves, facrificing

the Interests of their own Order to the People's Ambition. From Sovereign Magistrates that we were before, from having none but the Gods and our Confuls above us, we have been made subject to the Tyranny of the Tribunes of the People.

Our Councils, our Deliberations, nay even our Lives and our private Estates depend upon their Will; and those Plebeian Magistrates dispose of them as they think fit in those tumultuous Assemblies, where Paffion and Fury have a greater Sway than gainst the content of the content of than Reason and Justice. Nor do they stop here;

* C. Canuleius is now for uniting, by a shameful Mixture, the illustrious Blood of the Nobility with that of the Plebeians. If he brings this about, those who are born of Marriages so contrary to our Laws, always in difpute with themselves, will hardly know from what Families they descend, what Sacrifices they ought to join in, and whether they are of the Body of the People or Patricians. And as if it was not enough to confound all Distinction of Birth, and to break thro' all Rights both divine and humane, the Colleagues of Canuleius, the Tribunes, those Disturbers of the public Quiet, have the Boldness to lift up their Eyes to the very Con· fulfhip it felf. We are now just on the point of

' feeing that great Dignity fall a Prey to the Canu-· leii and the Icilii. But let those new Men be affured, added Claudius, that the Gods, Protectors of this Empire, will never fuffer it; and that we our

· felves will rather die a thousand Deaths, than bear

· fo great an Infamy.

Canuleius, naturally impatient, broke in upon him, Why the and asked him abruptly, wherein the Gods wou'd be People offended, if Plebeians, possessed of all the Qualifica-can't stand tions necessary for Government, were chosen Conforthe for the fulls. Can you then be to learn, replied Claudius, that the Plebeians have no Auspices, and cannot take them? Do you not know that this was one of the Reasons which induced the Decemvirs to forbid all unequal Alliances by the Laws of the Twelve Tables, that the Auspices might be taken only by Patricians, whose Birth shou'd be pure and without Mixture; fo that the Priefthood and the Confulship are equally restrained to that · Order?

This Answer was folid, and built upon the original Establishment of their Religion and Laws. But it only served to exasperate the People against Claudius; as if that Senator by such Reasons meant to reproach them, that they were not acceptable to the Z Gods, nion.

Gods, and were unworthy, thro' the Baseness of their Birth, to be initiated into their Mysteries.

The Confuls, to prevent the Bitterness which began to spread thro' the Minds of the Assembly, asked T. Genu- the Opinion of T. Genutius, the Brother of one of tius's Opi- those Magistrates. That Senator declared, that he with the greatest Concern beheld the Commonwealth afflicted with two Scourges at the fame time enough to destroy it utterly; namely, a War abroad, and domestic Feuds within the State: That each of those Evils called for a speedy Remedy, but that it was fo much the more difficult to find it, as the People's Discontent kept up the Enemy's Confidence. vertheless, that it was absolutely necessary to resolve upon fomething, and to chuse whether to bear the Infults of the Aguiand Volsci, or if they wou'd march into the Field to grant some Satisfaction to the People. That his Opinion was rather to yield up some part of the Prerogatives of the Nobility in their Favour. than to abandon the Territory of Rome, to be plundered by Strangers. And he concluded, according to his private Agreement with the Confuls and Claudius, that the Law forbidding Alliances between Patrician and Plebeian Families ought to be abolished, as being contrary to the Union which ought to be maintained between the Citizens of one and the fame He added, that if the ancient Senators were fo averse to the Thoughts of seeing the Consular Dignity in the Hands of Plebeians, a Medium might be found which perhaps might fatisfy both Parties. That the way wou'd be to suspend for a time the Election and Title of that Dignity, and to create in the room of Confuls fix military Tribunes, who shou'd have the same Functions and the same Authority, and that the three first shou'd always be Patricians.

and the other three might be Plebeians. That the Military Tribunes Year following the Senate and People might decide established by Plurality of Voices in a general Assembly, Liv. 1. 4. what Magistrates they wou'd be governed by, and D.H.l.11. whether they wou'd have Confuls again as of old, Zonaras.

or continue to elect military Tribunes: which for the future shou'd be done in all the Comitia.

This Proposal was approved by Plurality of Voices, in spite of the seeming Opposition of Claudius. T. Genutius had the Praises both of the Senate and the People for this happy Thought; the Senators were glad to have excluded the Plebeians from a Dignity which they hoped to set up again with all its Prerogatives in more savourable Times; and the People, without disturbing themselves about an empty Name, cou'd not contain their Joy at seeing themselves at length admitted into the Government of the Commonwealth under any Title whatsoever. Most of them cried they wou'd now no longer refuse to march against the Enemy; that they wou'd willingly expose themselves to the Danger, since they were to have a share in the Reward.

Some Days afterwards an Assembly was held for the Election of these new Magistrates. Some former Tribunes of the People, and the chief Plebeians, hoping to carry those Dignities, appeared in the Forum cloathed in white, to be the more remarkable; but the People, satisfied with having obtained a Right to set up in those Elections, gave all their Votes to Patricians: Nay, and but three military Tribunes were chosen, and the Majority of Voices sell upon A. Sempronius Atratinus, L. Attilius, and Year of T. Cecilius or Clelius, all three Patricians, and emi-Rome nent for their Valour and Capacity in the Art of 309. D.H.Ibid. War.

But these three Magistrates were obliged to depose themselves three Months after their Election, upon account that C. Curtius, who presided in it, gave notice that the Ceremonies of the Auspices, which always used to precede the Elections for Curule Magistracies, had not been exactly observed. The Romans were very scrupulous in the least Circumstances that concerned their Religion; but perhaps the Patricians created this Doubt only in order to restore the Consular Office. And accordingly, the military Tribunes had no fooner abdicated their new Digni-T. Ouinti-ty, but an Inter-rex was named, that the Commonus Barba- wealth might not remain without a Head or Governour. But as he held the Government only in Trust, and in order to transfer the Authority to an-

The Confu-nual Magistrates, the main Question was whether late reflor-those Magistrates shou'd be Consuls or military Tribunes: the Most ancient Senators failed not to declare for the Confulfhip; the People on the contrary feemed inclined to military Tribunes. But a fealoufy arifing among the Candidates of this last Order, those whose Party was not strong enough to raise them to that Post, chose rather to have the Confulship restored, than to see their Rivals invested with a Dignity which they themselves cou'd not obtain; and thus by the joint Confent of the Senate and People, the Inter-rex appointed Confuls, and named to fill that Post the remaining part of the Year, L. Papirius Mugillanus, and L. Sempronius Atratinus, Brother to one of the Patricians that had

Year of Rome 309.

Origin of the Cenfors. Year of Rome 310, or 311.

abdicated the Tribuneship, as we faid above. Nothing confiderable happened in their Confulate; but in the following, and that of M. Geganius and T. Quintius, the Cenforship was erected; a new Office, or rather only a Portion taken out of the Confulship. And this new Dignity of Cenfor, which at first seemed of but little Moment, became in time, by the Power annexed to it, the Pinacle of Honour, and the most formidable Magistracy in the Republic.

As a Spirit of Conquest was what chiefly prevailed in this Nation, the ancient King Servius, in order to have a fure Supply of Men and Money, decreed, as we have already shewn, that every five Years an Enumeration shou'd be made of all the Roman Citizens, with an exact Valuation of every Man's The Prince or Magistrate by this means cou'd know immediately how many Inhabitants Rome had capable of bearing Arms, and what Contribution might be raifed upon them.

But the Confuls, who were frequently taken up abroad

abroad with almost continual Wars, not having had leisure in above seventeen Years to make that Enumeration which was called the Census, it was proposed for the Ease of the Consuls, that two Magistrates shou'd be created of the Order of the Patricians, who, with the Title of Censors, shou'd every five Years take that general Review of the whole

Roman People.

The Tribunes, tho' always upon their Guard against every thing offered by the Senate, did not oppose the Establishment of this new Magistracy. They did not so much as demand that the Plebeians shou'd be allow'd a Share in it; whether, because they saw, that the Power which went along with the Censorship was but small, or because they were satisfied that by separating those Functions from the Consulate, a Diminution was made of the Power of a Magistracy, which was the Object of their Hatred and Emulation. Thus the Law for the Creation of two Censors passed without any Dispute.

Papirius and Sempronius, the Consuls of the pre-Rome ceding Year, were raised to that Post, and it was 310. Conferred upon them with one Voice, to make them Liv. Dec. amends for the Year of their Consulates not being compleat, because they did not enter upon the First Cen-Execution of it till after the Abdication of the mili-sors.

tary Tribunes.

While the Consuls had the Charge of that Enu-Functions meration, all their Business in that Article was only of the Cento take an exact Account of the Names, Estates, forse Ages, and Conditions of all the Masters of Families, and the Name and Age of their Children and Slaves. But when this part of the Magistracy was dismembred from the Consulship, and made a Dignity by itself, as Men generally study nothing but how to enlarge their own Authority, the Censors Val. Max. took upon them the Reformation of Manners. They 1. 2. c. 9. took Cognizance of the Behaviour of every Citizen; the Senators and Knights were subject to their Censure as much as the meanest of the People; they had Power to expel out of those Bodies such as they thought unworthy of being in them. As to fuch Plebeians as thro' their Debauchery or Laziness were fallen to Want, they removed them down to an inferior Class, nay, oftentimes deprived them of their Right of voting, and they were no longer reputed Citizens but as they were still liable to pay their part of the Tributes.

When the Cenfors made their general Review of the whole Nation, there was not a Citizen, but what trembled at the fight of their Tribunal; the Senator, thro' fear of being driven out of the Senate; the Knight with Apprehension of being broke and deprived of the Horse which the Republic kept for him; and the private Citizen, with dread of being expunged out of his Class, and removed down to the lowest, or at least into a Century less honourable than his own. So that this wholesome Terror was the Support of the Sumptuary Laws, the Bond of Concord, and as it were the Guardian of Modesty and Virtue.

X

Year of Rome 311. The Republic, by means of this new Establishment, enjoyed a profound Repose in the Consulate of M. Fabius and Postbumus Albutius. Not but that some Tribunes of the People, always restless, endeavoured to revive the old Pretensions of the People, relating to the Partition of the Lands: They even threatned, according to their old Custom, to oppose raising any Soldiers. But as there were no Wars then to be carried on, an Opposition which Peace made useless and ineffectual was only despised; and the Senate's Authority grew so much the stronger as they cou'd then do without the People's Assistance.

Year of Rome

All was quiet, when the next Year in the Confulate of Proculus Geganius, and L. Menenius, there happened a dreadful Famine, which occasioned Seditions, by means whereof a private Man had like to have got Possession of the Sovereign Power. The

Famine in Senate imputed this Scarcity of Corn to the Laziness Rome. and Negligence of the Plebeians, who intoxicated with with the feditious Harangues of the Tribunes, were Consequenalways fauntering in the Forum, and instead of cultivating their Lands, wasted their time in idle Reafonings about State Affairs. The People, on the contrary, who always grumble at those who have the care of the Government, threw back the whole Blame of this Dearth upon want of care in the Consuls. But those Magistrates, without giving any heed to the Murmurs of the Multitudes took all convenient Measures to get Corn from abroad, and Liv.1.4. sent C. Minutius upon that Commission.

The Senator, who was an active vigilant Man, de Civ. fent Commissioners all over Tuscany; but with all c. 17. their Diligence he cou'd gather but a small Quantity of Corn. A Roman Knight, whose Name was Sp. Melius, the richest private Man in the Commonwealth, had been beforehand with him at the Markets, and had bought up most of the Grain in that Province.

That Knight, who was yet more ambitious than sp. Melihe was rich, flattered himself, that in so general a us's Ambi-Calamity, the People would sell their Liberty at an tion. easy Rate. Corn was every Day distributed by his Order among the Common People and the Poor; and with a Liberality always suspicious, and especially in a Commonwealth, he made all those his Creatures whom he sed at his own Expence; his House quickly became the Place of Resuge for the Poor, the Idle, those that had ruined themselves by Debauchery, and such as being destitute of all Notions of Honour or Religion, wou'd gladly see the Government quite subverted, provided they cou'd but any way better their own Circumstances in the Change.

Minutius, whose Commission frequently obliged him, either by himself or his Agents, to have some Intercourse with the Emissaries of Melius, sound out, that that ambitious Man, who alone sustained as many Poor as the whole State, made use of the pretence of that Public Liberality, which drew Crowds of People to his Gate, to form Assemblies in his House, nay some, whom Minutius had probably gained, brought him Information, that a great quantity of Arms used to be carried thither by Night.

He afterwards learnt that there was a Conspiracy laid to change the Form of the Government; that the Delign was already concerted; that MELIUS aspired to the Royalty; that the People, seduced by his Liberalities, were to take up Arms in his Fayour; and that even some Tribunes were prevailed upon by Money to fell the Public Liberty.

Minutius, having discovered the whole Secret of this Conspiracy, immediately gave an Account of it to the Senate. Heavy Reproaches were thrown upon the Confuls of the preceding Year, and on Quintius Agrippa Menenius, who succeeded them in that Dignity, for not having prevented and punished the ill Deligns of MELIUS. Quintius replyed, that neither his Predecessors, his Colleague, nor himself wanted either Courage or Resolution to punish fo horrid an Attempt; but that every Body knew the Confular Authority was in a Manner annihilated by the excessive Power usurped by the Tribunes; that an Appeal to the People wou'd put a ftop to all their Profecutions, and that if ever the Buliness was brought before an Assembly, MELIUS wou'd infallibly escape from Justice, by Fayour of the Multitude that adored him; that in the prefent Danger of the Republic they stood in need of a Dictator, that is to fay of an absolute Magistrate that shou'd be equally above the Laws and the Tribunes of the People.

L. Quintius appoin- named L. Quintius, who notwithstanding his great ted Dicta- Age was still Master of a Courage and Resolution, gainst Sp. proportionable to that Supreme Magistracy.

The next Day he placed Corps of Guards in all parts of the City, as if the Enemy had already been at the Gates of Rome. This Precaution surprised all that knew nothing of the Conspiracy; every 314.

His Advice being unanimoully approved, he Melius.

Year of

Rome

body

body enquired the Reason of this Novelty, and why a Dictator shou'd be named in the midit of Peace. But MELIUS plainly faw That Supreme Magistrate was fet up only against him; he doubled his Liberalities, to strengthen himself against the Senate with the Affiftance of the Multitude. The Dictator finding that nothing but a stroke of Authority cou'd crush so dangerous a Plot, caused the Tribunal to be brought into the Forum, and ascended it guarded by his Lictors armed with their Axes, and with all the Majesty of the Sovereign Power. He then fent Servilius, his Master of the Horse, to cite Melius to appear before him. Melius, furprized and uncertain what Course to take, delayed to obey, and fought to make his Escape. Servilius commanded a Lictor to arrest him; and that Officer having executed the Orders of the General of the Horse, Melius cries out, that the Senate wanted to destroy him only out of Jealousy, and because he had confecrated his Estate to the Relief of the People; he therefore implores the Affiftance of the Multitude, and conjures his Friends not to fuffer him to be murdered in their Presence. The People rile; they encourage one another; and refcue him out of the Lictor's Hands. MELIUS threw himself into the Crowd to escape Servilius's Pur-Sp. Melifuit; but as he was endeavouring to stir up a Sedi-us kill'd. tion, Servilius run him thro' with his Sword; and, Liv. 1. 4. all covered with his Blood, appeared before the Florus. Dictator, and told him, he himself had punished a Citizen who had refused to obey his Orders.

'I expected no less from you, replied that generous old Man; you have by this Action secured the Public Liberty.' He then caused Melius's House to be razed to the Ground; prodigious Quantities of Corn were found there still, which the Dictator ordered to be sold to the People at low Rates, that they might not feel the loss of Melius.
It was for the same reason, that the Head of the Conspiracy being taken off, that prudent Magistrate

did

did not think it proper to enquire after his Adherents, for fear he shou'd find too many guilty, and fo carry the Plot into Action by going about to punish all the Conspirators too severely.

But the Tribunes of the People, imagining their Crime was unknown because it was unpunished, took occasion from the Dictator's Indulgence to fall into Invectives against him; and especially against the General of the Horse, who without the least formality of Justice, or so much as the Order of his Superior, had killed a Citizen in the very Heart of his Country. Those Magistrates loudly threatened to make him answer severely for it, as soon as ever the Dictator was out of his Post; they talked of no less than throwing him down from the top of the Tarpeian Rock as a Tyrant. Never was the College of Tribunes known to be fo thoroughly provoked against the Senate; they obstinately opposed the Election of Confuls: And the Patricians to avoid a Tumult were forced to be fatisfied with creating only Military Tribunes.

Year of Rome 315.

Some Tribunes of the People flattered themselves, that they shou'd have a great Sway in this Election; but notwithstanding all their Cabals, the People contented with being allowed to stand Candidates, gave all their Votes to Patricians of known Valour and Capacity, among whom was L. Quintius the Son of the Dictator who had just taken off Melius.

The Wars which arose against the Veientes and Volsci, suspended the Rancour of the Tribunes against Servilius; nothing was thought of but how to deal with the Enemy; and a Rumour being spread abroad, that all the nations of Tuscany were to take Arms in favour of the Veientes, MAMERCUS ÆMI-Lius, a Man illustrious both in Peace and War, was raised to the Dictatorship, a Dignity which he had already enjoyed, and in which he had acquired great Glory against the same Enemies. But the confines the News of this dreadful League proving false, and ÆMILIUS finding himself deceived in his hopes of fignalizing fignalizing his fecond Dictatorship by a new Victory was refolved however to leave fome Monument of his Zeal for the Public Liberty. He observed to the People in a general Affembly, that their Anceftors, in order to preferve their Freedom, had established in the Republic no Office whose Authority and Functions shou'd last for above a Year; that they had not remember'd fo wife a Precaution in the Creation of the Cenfors, who had been allowed a five Years Magistracy; that during an Authority of fo long continuance, they might have leifure to abuse it, to make themselves Creatures, and so oppress the Liberty of their Country; and he proposed to make a Law for shortning the duration of that Office, and for regulating that none shou'd enjoy it above a Year and an half.

Year of Rome 319. Æmilius Censorship to 18

This Discourse was received with great Applause, Liv. 1. 4. especially by the People. It was added afterwards to this Law, that no Senator shou'd ever have the Cenforship twice in his Life, tho' he had behaved himfelf in his first with the Approbation of his Fellow-Citizens; and for fear that Dignity being left in the Hands of one fingle Man shou'd make him too powerful, it was farther decreed, that it one of the Cenfors happened to dye or refign his Office, the other shou'd not hold it, nor even get a Colleague fubstituted in the other's room; and that in the Election of Cenfors, tho' a Man had the Majority of Voices, he shou'd not be declared Censor, if his Colleague wanted the necessary Number; that the Election of both shou'd be begun again, till in the fame Scrutiny they had all the Votes requisite to their being both acknowledged Cenfors together: Precautions which this Nation fo jealous of its Liberty thought necessary to take against the Brigues and Cabals of the Patricians.

The Senate cou'd not without a fecret Discontent fee the Dictator lessen the Power of a Magistracy peculiar to their Order. C. Furius and M. Geganius, the Censors that Year, shewed their Resentment of this Injury, without regard to the Merit and Services That Dictator had no fooner abdiof ÆMILIUS. cated his Dignity, but in virtue of the Power belonging to the Cenforship, they cut so illustrious a Man out of his Tribe, and removed him down to the last; took from him, as from a fcandalous Wretch, the Privilege of Voting, and loaded him with a Tribute eight times greater than he used to pay. But this Persecution, instead of dishonouring him, gave him a new Lustre; all the Shame of this Revenge fell back upon the Authors: The People with Indignation purfued them into the Forum, and had torn them to pieces if ÆMILIUS had not been so generous as to fave them.

Æmilius degraded by the Cenfors.

The Tribunes exafperated that they had no Share in Offices.

The Tribunes of the People laid hold of this Occasion to stir up the People's Animosity against the Senate afresh. They cried in all the Assemblies, that it was no wonder the Patricians shou'd use the People ill, when out of their Hatred to the Plebeians the Public they did not blush at depriving a Senator, a Consular, one that had been honoured with two Dictatorships, of the Right of a Citizen, only for having proposed a Law, which tho' it diminished their Authority, feeured the Public Liberty. Such Discourses, repeated by the Tribunes in most of the Assemblies, kept up the Rancour in the Spirits of the People, who to shew their Resentment against the Senate wou'd never give their Confent to the Election of Confuls; they were again obliged to chuse Military Tribunes: It was indeed the fame Dignity and the fame Office, tho' with a different Title; but the Privilege which the People had of rejecting the Confulate, and the Liberty they were allowed of standing Candidates in the Elections for the Military Tribuneship, made the Tribunes of the People, who aspired to that Post, forget nothing that might induce the People to demand Military Tribunes; nevertheless in spite of all their Interest, the People still prepoffessed in Favour of the Nobility, as to their Capacity

Capacity in Government, and the Command of Ar-Year of mies, gave their Voices again to Patricians.

Rome
This Preference turned the Complaints and Re-320, and

This Preference turned the Complaints and Re-320, and fentment of the Tribunes of the People wholly against the Multitude; they publickly threaten'd them, that they wou'd fling up the Care of their Interests.

· Will the Fear you are under of the Power of the Nobles, faid they in their Harangues, keep you in a perpetual Subjection to their Will? In the Election of Military Tribunes, when you are free to e give your Votes how you pleafe, why do you never remember, neither yourselves, nor your Magiftrates? Know that there ought to be great Rewards to encourage great Souls. And if motives of Gratitude will have no Effect upon you, at least be afraid lest disheartned by your Indisference, we fhou'd in our turn leave you a Prey to the Info-

· lence and Tyranny of the Patricians.

These Discourses, which the Tribunes of the People repeated in all their Assemblies, awakened the Antipathy and Ambition of the Plebeians. Each mutually exhorted the other to despise the Intreaties and Threats of the Great. They began now afresh to talk of the Division of the Lands, the everlasting Source of Contention between the People and the Senate. Others proposed, that a Tax shou'd be laid at least upon those Lands, which of right belong'd to the Public, and the Money be employed for the relief of the People, and to pay the Troops during Those among the Plebeians, who the Campaign. were eminent either for their Riches or the Glory they had acquired in the Wars, refolved to use their whole Credit to raise themselves to the Military Tribuneship, and to the Supream Authority which was affigned to that Dignity. The Senate, to difperfe this Storm which was gathering against their Authority, refolved now to chuse none but Consuls: An Office from which the Plebeians were excluded of course, as we have faid before. The Wars which the Æqui and the Volsci then declared, favoured this Defign.

Year of Rome 322.

As there were then no Plebeians who had ever commanded Armies, and none but old Captains and the chief Men of the Senate were fit for that Employment, the People were indifferent, whether Confuls or Military Tribunes were chosen this Thus the Senate being left Masters of the Year. Election, it was foon refolved to restore the Consulship, and T. Quintius the Son of Lucius, and C. Julius Mento attained that Dignity. A better Choice cou'd not have been made, with respect either to Birth or Capacity in the Art of War. But Jealoufy and Division arising between them, it is said they were beaten near Algidum. The Senate, to prevent the Consequences of their Defeat, were resolved to have recourse to a Dictator. But the two Confuls, on whom the Nomination of him depended, confidering that from fupream Magistrates, which they were now, they shou'd be reduced to the mean Quality of the Dictator's Lieutenants, and that tho' they retained the Name of Confuls, they shou'd have but little more Authority than the General of the Horse; those two Magistrates, tho' they differed in all other respects, united to cross a Nomination which they looked upon as the Destruction of their own Authority. And tho' News came upon News of the Success of the Enemies Arms, they cou'd never be prevailed upon to name a Dictator.

The Senate The Senate, not able to overcome their Obstinacy, implores had recourse to an Expedient more pernicious in its the Assistance of the Consequences than the very Evil they intended to restributes dress. Q. Servilius Priscus, a Consular Person, turnagainst the ing to the Tribunes of the People who were then in Consuls. the Senate, exhorted them to get the People to inter-Livy 1. 4. pose their Authority, of which they were in a manner the Guardians, to oblige the Consuls to name a ner the Guardians, to oblige the Consuls to name a Dictator. Those Plebeian Magistrates joyfully laid hold of so fair an Occasion, to raise their own Authority upon the Ruin of that of the Senate and Consuls. They even did more than was required of them, as those generally do who intend to enlarge their Power

beyond

beyond its due Limits: and instead of carrying this Affair before an Affembly of the People, they prefumed in the very Senate to order the two Confuls to be led to Prison, if they did not immediately name a Dictator. Those two Magistrates submitted, upon the Terror of Imprisonment; they promised to name a Dictator; but they complained that the Senate it felf had debased the Consular Power, by subjecting it to the imperious Yoke of the Tribunes. It is certain, That chief Body of the Republic being exafperated against their Heads, and minding nothing but to vanquish their Obstinacy, were not then sensible of the Breach they had made in their own Authority. At length, after a great many Disputes between the two Confuls about the Choice of a Dictator, they referred the Decision of it to Chance, which proved favourable to T. Quintius; and he named his Fatherin-law Tubertus.

The Dictator immediately listed all those that were to serve, without giving Ear in the least either to Complaints or Excuses. He was an old Captain, of great Valour and Experience; but naturally severe and even cruel in his Government. The Power of Life and Death, which the Dictatorship gave him, and the Knowledge of his stern Disposition, made every Body run obediently to take their place under his Ensigns. He soon marched forth of Rome, Equi sought out the Enemy, deseated them in a bloody deseated. Engagement, took their Camp, and led back his Diodor.

The Republic for some.

The Republic for some time after this enjoyed a prosound Peace. But a Calamity more grievous than War fell upon Rome, and almost upon all Italy. An extream Drought occasioned a Famine, Famine which was followed by a dreadful Plague, that and Plague spared neither Man nor Beast. The Romans, natural Rome. Superstitively superstitious, after having in vain exhausted all ons therethe application of Medicine, had recourse to super-upon. natural Aids. A foreign Worship was introduced Year of into the City; the Temples and the very Sreets Rome were 325.

were crowded with People, facrificing to Deities Livy 1. 4. unknown: And they were not ashamed, in order to 12 Tabu-conjure away the Diftemper, to apply to Charms, larum and all those idle Superstitions, which the weakness of Leges. Man has found out. The Senate, who were well apprized of the Danger of Innovations in Religion, order'd the Ædiles to put a stop to this Disorder; and it was forbid by a public Edict, to practife any Ceremony which was not lawfully admitted into the Commonwealth.

Year of Rome 327.

Diftur-

the Tri-

bunes.

the Election of new Magistrates; and the People prevailed to have Military Tribunes chosen with the Consular Power. But this Alteration in the Government was not fortunate. The War breaking out afresh with the Veientes, the Tribunes not very well united among themselves, were defeated, which made it necessary to create a Dictator. C. Ma-MERCUS ÆMILIUS was pitched upon to fill that Emilius that eminent Dignity. His Merit and the Necessi-

This Calamity being over, they proceeded to again Dic-ties of the State, obliged the Romans to trust the tator; his Fortune of the Republic in the Hands of a Man, Moderati- whom the Cenfors, as we heard before, did not 012. blush to degrade from his Tribe, and to brand as unworthy of the Privileges of a Roman Citizen. The Success of this War was answerable to the Confidence which the Roman People had in their General. MAMERCUS ÆMILIUS in less than sixteen

Days cut part of the Enemy's Army to pieces, made Year of a great Number of Prisoners, who either served as Rome a Reward to the Soldiers, or were fold for Slaves 327. Livy. l. 4 to the Profit of the public Treasury. The Dictator Flor. 1. 1. after a folemn Triumph refigned his Office, and rof. 1. 2. c. made it a question whether his Moderation was not yet greater than his Valour. 13.

These continual Victories of the Romans only bances of ferved to swell the Minds, and increase the Ambition, of the Prime Men among the People. They would not hear any more of electing Confuls, because, they were excluded from the Consulate, tho allowed

allowed to put up for the Tribunitian Office. Thus, in spite of all the Senate could do, they were obliged to comply with chusing four military Tribunes. But notwithstanding all the Endeavours which the Tribunes of the People used, to come in for their Share in this Election, they had again the Mortification to fee the Patricians run away with all the Votes. It is impossible to express the Rage and Indignation of those Plebeian Magistrates. They declared publickly, that it was better to abolish the Law which gave the People leave to aspire to the Post of military Tribune, than to see it thus evaded in all the Elections by the Cabals of the Patricians; and that it would be less Shame to their Order, to be wholly excluded from it, as they were from the Confulship, than to have the Privilege of standing Candidates, and to be rejected upon the Election, as incapable or unworthy of that Honour. fell into Complaints against the People themselves; they threatned wholly to throw up the Care of their Interests; and as if they had a mind in revenge to turn the Commonwealth quite topfy-turvy, fome proposed to carry part of the People into new Colonies, others revived the old Pretentions relating to the Division of the Lands. There were some demanded, that no Citizen should be obliged to go to the War, unless a regular Pay was allowed him. In a Word, there was nothing which those seditious Magistrates forgot to trump up, that might either revenge them of the Nobility, or bring the People by the Hopes of those Innovations to raise them by their Voices to the Dignity of Military Tribunes.

The Patricians who were then actually in Possession of that Office, and thought it a Shame to have Plebeians for their Successors, privately agreed with the Senate to draw out of Rome the Chief of the People, and especially those that aspired to the Military Tribuneship, upon Pretence of making an Incursion into the Lands of the Volsci, who they gave out were making a powerful Armament, and during their Ab-

A a

fence,

fence, instead of Military Tribunes, it was resolved to chuse only Consuls. Those Magistrates, before they left the City, gave the Care of the Government and of presiding in the Election to Appius Claudius, their Colleague, the Son of the Decemvir, a young Man, fierce, bold, enterprizing, and educated from his very Cradle in an hereditary Aversion to the People's Power. He no fooner faw the Tribunes, and most of the Plebeians gone into the Field, but, laying hold of the Opportunity of their Absence, he proceeded to the Election of Consuls. C. SEMPRONIUS Atratinus, and C. Fabius Vibulanus, were chosen to fill that Dignity. And the People and their Tribunes at their return found the Election of those two Magistrates too strongly settled to think of reverfing it. They turned their Refentment against the Consuls themselves, and endeavoured afterwards to charge as a Crime upon SEMPRONIUS the ill Success he had during his Consulate in the War against the Volsci.

The Ro-Volsci.

Year of

Rome 330.

That warlike Nation, who had long fought with mans beat the Romans for Empire and Dominion, did this ten by the Year make, as it were a final Push to avoid receiving the Yoke of their old Enemies. The Volscian Magistrates raised a great Number of Troops, made Choice of excellent Generals, and omitted none of those wife Precautions, which may be looked upon as the furest Tokens of good Success. fent against them her first Conful SEMPRONIUS, a Man full of Valour, popular and familiar to the Soldier, who adored him, but one that was more a Soldier himself than a Captain, and that made War as if Courage alone were fufficient to supply all the Duties of a General. He advanced towards the Enemies as if he had been going to a certain Victory, and marched on with a Security ever dangerous. The two Armies foon came in view of each other: The Volsci had taken all the Advantages that the Situation of the Place would afford them. SEM-PRONIUS, on the contrary, who despised Enemies that that they had so often vanquished, neglected all those useful Precautions; and as if he had been sure of winning the Victory only with his Infantry, he left his Horse in a Place where he could receive no manner of Affiftance from them. The Fight began with equal Fury on both fides. The Romans. tho' in Diforder, advanced daringly, and charged the Enemies with their accustomed Valour. as they fought with more Fire than Order, and the Volsci on the contrary drawn together in firm and close Battalions, defended themselves with great Courage, Fortune began to declare for the fide where there was most Discipline. The Volsci, led by an experienced General, press on briskly and break the Legions. The Roman Soldier furprised, instead of offending, thinks only how he may avoid the Attack of the Enemy. They infenfibly give back, the Confusion increases, and at last they lose Ground apace. The Conful perceiving it, haftes where there is most Danger. He fights with his own Hand, and tries to animate his Soldiers by his Example and reproaches, but in vain. He calls and he threatens; no Body hears either his Voice or his Orders; and the Soldier terrified, shews that he fears nothing but the Enemy and Death. At length all the Legions fall entirely into Confusion and Disorder, and the Battel had been quite loft if SEX TEMPA-NIUS, an old Captain of Horse, had not proposed Prudence to the other Officers of the same Body to dismount and Valour and throw themselves in the Front of the Legions to of Tembear off the shock of the Enemy.

SEMPRONIUS, who, as we faid before, had flattered himself that he should be able to defeat them only with his Foot, had left his Horse in a Place hemm'd in with Bogs, where it was impossible for them to sight. Tempanius perceiving this Fault, Val. Max. and the Disorder the Legions were put into, leap'd l. 3. c. 2. to the Ground with all his Comrades, and address- sing himself to them; Follow my Lance, said he to them, as if it were a Standard; and let us shew the Enemy,

A a 2

Enemy, that as well on Foot as on Horseback, nothing can withstand us. That whole Body of Horse dismounted after his Example, and followed him. TEMPANIUS, at the Head of this new Infantry, marches strait against the Enemy and restores the Fight; he pushes all that he meets. The Legions at the fight of this Succour refume Courage, and the Battel is renew'd with fresh Fury. The General of the Volsci cou'd not conceive whence this new Body of Infantry shou'd come. But as he found himself press'd by them, he sent Orders to his Troops to open their Ranks, and give Passage to the Body which TEMPANIUS commanded; and then to close their Battalions again, in order to separate those new Troops from the Legions. The Volsci, in Execution of his Orders, give back, seem to retreat; divide, and give Passage to TEMPANIUS and his Troop; who, carried on by the Heat of their Courage, and imagining they were following Victory, and a routed Enemy, rushed still forwards. But it was not long e're they found that they were cut off from their Fellows by some of the Enemy's Battalions which were closed again, and had posted themselves between them and the Roman Army. TEMPANIUS did his utmost to cut his way back thro' them and rejoin the Conful; but he cou'd not break their Order. In this Extremity he spied an Eminence which he presently got Possession of.

The Volsci, fancying it was impossible he shou'd escape them, immediately assail him. TEMPANIUS defends himself with invincible Bravery; and this Diversion faves the Conful's Army. The Legions now more flackly press'd, rally again, return to the Charge, and the Conful at their Head strives with furprizing Valour to rescue and join TEMPANIUS. The Volsci stand immoveable every where; and tho' they lost abundance of Men in this last Action, they chuse rather to be killed than to fly. Ground: the living Soldier steps into the Place of the Dead, and defends it with the same Intrepidity;

nor cou'd the Romans break fo strong a Bulwark, nor pierce one Battalion. They fought far into the Night, without either of the Generals being able to perceive on which side lay the Advantage, and nothing but Weariness and Want of Light parted the two Armies.

SEMPRONIUS and the General of the Volsci, uncertain of the Success of the Battel, and both equally apprehensive of being obliged to renew the Fight again next Morning, left the Field of Battel as it were by Consent; and not thinking themselves safe even in their Camp, retired with Precipitation. After they had marched all Night each towards their own Country, with equal Terror, they intrenched themselves with as much Haste and Care as if they had still been in sight of each other.

TEMPANIUS, who doubted not but the Enemy Livy, 1. 4.

wou'd attack him again as foon as ever the Darkness was dispelled, was very much surprised when at daybreak he fay neither Friends nor Enemies. He cou'd not imagine what shou'd be become of two great Armies, who, but a few Hours before, stretch'd over the whole Plain. He first sent out to view the Volscian Camp, and then that of the Romans. Not a Man was to be found in either, except a few wounded Persons that were not able to follow the main Body of the Army. TEMPANIUS was desirous of being himself an Eye-witness of so strange an Event; and after having taken the necessary Precautions to fecure himself from being surprised, he visited the two Camps, and found in each an equal Solitude. Thence he went out to the Field of Battel, which offered nothing to his View but the Dead and the Dying, and that difmal Image which is left in fuch a Place the Day after a Battel. At length hearing no News of the Conful's Army, and fearing to be furrounded again by that of the Volsci, he took up the Roman Soldiers that were wounded, and with them refumed the way to Rome. He was received there with the greatest Surprize and Joy; he had Aaa been given over for loft with all his Comrades. Some that fled and were got to Rome before him, and had

feen him cut off from the Army and furrounded by the Enemy, had not failed to give out that the whole Body of Horse was cut to pieces. The return of TEMPANIUS and his Comrades dispersed those false Rumours. But the Tribunes of the People were refolved not to lose so savourable an Opportunity of The People were actually destroying the Conful. affembled when TEMPANIUS arrived at Rome. They obliged him to appear in the Affembly before he fet Tempani- foot in his own House; and Cn. Julius, one of those us's Mode- Plebeian Magistrates, asked him aloud whether he thought SEMPRONIUS was fit to command the Armies of the Roman People; whether he had found in the last Engagement that he had disposed his Troops like an experienced General; what was become of him fince the Battel, and where the Army was that he commanded? I expect, added that Tribune, that you wou'd answer directly and without any Evasions, to all these Particulars; inform us what is become of our Legions; whether they have abandoned you, or you deserted them; and lastly, whether we are Vanquished or Victors. TEMPANIUS, without going about to make his own Advantage of SEMPRONIUS'S Difgrace, answered the Tribune, that it did not become a private Officer to pretend to judge of the Capacity of his General; and that the People had given their Opinion of it when they chose him Conful: That he had feen him fight at the Head of the Legions with invincible Bravery, and that he exposed his own Person in all the Places where there was most Danger: That the great Distance between them after their Separation, and the Confusion which always happens in fo obstinate a Fight, had kept him from knowing every thing that passed where the Conful was engaged; but that he cou'd however affure them, by what had appeared to him in the Field of Battel, that the Volsci had not lost fewer Men than the Romans: and that as upon his Separation

ration,

tion from the main Body of the Legions, he had been fo fortunate as to get possession of an Eminence, on which, notwithstanding all the Assaults of the Adversary, he had preserved those that were trusted to his Command; so he presumed the Consul, in that general Disorder, had gained the Mountains, and there intrench'd himself. Tempanius then desired leave to retire, in order to get the Wounds dress'd which he had received in the Fight. The whole Assembly gave yet greater Praises to the Discretion and Modesty of his Answer, than to the Valour and good Conduct with which he had fought against the Enemies of his Country.

The People, in reward of his Services, chose him Sempro-Tribune some time afterwards, together with three nius acother Officers that had diftinguished themselves in cus'd; is the fame manner. In this Post he gave new Proofs Tempaof the Generofity of his Soul. For L. Hortenfius, nius. one of his Colleagues, having cited SEMPRONIUS, Year of after the Year of his Confulate was expired, to an-Rome fwer before the Affembly of the People for his Con-331. duct in the last Battel, TEMPANIUS and his three Colleagues resolutely undertook his Defence, and intreated Hortensius not to persecute a brave General, who had been only unfortunate upon this Occasion. But if I shew you, replied Hortensius, that this Patrician, whose Valour you so highly praise, is the only Cause of our Defeat, will you oppose the Justice be deserves? Will you destroy the Power of the Tribuneship; and turn against the People themselves the very Authority which you hold only from their Favour? TEMPA-NIUS and his Colleagues answered him with great Moderation, that they owned the People had an abfolute Power over all that bore the Name of Roman Citizens; that they paid the greatest Reverence to that Authority, and would never make a wrong Use of the Trust which was reposed in them: But that if the Intreaties they made in their General's behalf were rejected by one of their Colleagues, they wou'd change their Habit like the Person accused, and share Aa4 with their Captain either in his good or ill Fortune. Hortenfius, struck with their Generosity, cried out he wou'd never confent that the Roman People shou'd fee their Tribunes in mourning. He dropp'd his Impeachment, and declared he wou'd never profecute a General, unfortunate indeed against the Enemy, but who had found means to make himself fo

dear and agreeable to his Soldiers.

The Affection which four Tribunes of the People had shewed to a Patrician, and Hortensius's Compliance, feemed once more to have restored a Union between the Senate and the People. The State feem'd perfectly quiet; but this Concord lasted not long. In the Consulate of T. Quintius Capitolinus and Fabius Vibulanus, new Diffentions arose with relation to the Quæstorship. The Quæstors were Officers that had the care of the public Treasure; and the first Foundation of that Office is ascribed to P. Valerius Pubtary Quie-licola, as we have already observed. That Patrician having thought it convenient that the Public Treasure shou'd be kept in the Temple of Saturn, chose two Senators to take care of it, who were afterwards called Quæstors, and left the Choice of them to the People.

Year of Rome 332. Contentions about the Miliftors.

> The two Confuls above-mentioned being enter'd upon their Office, and finding that, fince the Conquests and Aggrandizement of the Republic, those two Officers were not sufficient to dispatch all their Business, proposed to increase the number of them. and to add to the two first Quæstors, who never stirred from Rome, two others who shou'd attend the Confuls and Generals in the Army, to keep an account of the Spoils of the Enemies, to fell the Booty. and above all, to take care of the Provisions and Subfiftence of the Army. The Senate and the People at first seemed equally to approve of this Proposal, and the former readily consented that in the Election of Quæstors, as well as in that of Military Tribunes, the Roman People, if they thought fit, might chuse as many Plebeians as Patricians. But the

the Tribunes, ever unjust, demanding that half those Magistrates shou'd always certainly be Plebeians, the Senate rather than submit to this, broke this Design of the Confuls. The Tribunes, in revenge, renewed the Proposal of the Division of the Lands, the perpetual Shift of those seditious Magistrates. After having inveighed with great Rage against the Senate, they declared they wou'd never give their Confent to the Election of new Confuls, if the People were not allowed in the Election of Quæstors to give their Voices indifferently for Plebeians or Patricians. The Senate abfolutely rejected this Condition; and the Obstinacy of the two Parties in holding to their Demands, threw the Republic into a kind of Anarchy. They were obliged to have recourse several times to an Inter-rex; a Dignity which was but for five Days. Nay, the Tribunes often opposed even his Election, for fear he shou'd nominate Consuls by his own Authority. At length L. Papirius Mugillanus, being Inter-rex, managed the Business so artfully, that he brought both Parties to confent to the chusing of Military Tribunes instead of Confuls, and that in the Election of the four Quæstors, as well as in that of those Military Tribunes, the People might give their Votes as they pleased, either to Patricians or Plebeians,

The Assembly for the Election of Military Tribunes was held first; and notwithstanding all the Credit and Intrigues of the Tribunes of the People, four Patricians were chosen, namely L. Quintius Cincinnatus, Sp. Furius Medullinus, M. Manlius, Year of and A. Sempronius Atratinus, Cousin to the Conful Rome of the same Name: The latter was pitched upon to 333. 1. 4. preside in the Election of Quæstors. Antistius, Patrician Tribune of the People, and Pompilius, one of his Quaftors. Colleagues, put up the one his Son, the other his Brother, and demanded the Quæstorship for them. But in spite of all their Cabals, the Patricians alone carried that Dignity; and the People, though incensed by their seditious Harangues, had not Power to deny it to Men whose Fathers and Ancestors had been honoured with the Confulship. The two

Tribunes

Tribunes of the People, enraged almost to Madness at this Preference, and the Shame of a Refusal, cried out that it was impossible the People cou'd have had so little regard to the Intreaty and Recommendation of their own Magistrates: That there must infallibly have been some Deceit in the Scrutiny, and that A. Sempronius, who had gathered the Votes, ought to be called to an account for it. But as he was a Man of known Probity, and his Innocence and the Dignity with which he was then invested, fet him above their reach, they turned all their Indignation against C. Sempronius his Relation, whom we have spoken of before. They revived the Profecution against him for his ill Conduct in the last Battel, which Hortensius at the Request of TEMPA-NIUS, had dropp'd; and he was condemned at their Suit, and that of Canuleius, another Tribune of the People, to pay a Fine of fifteen Thousand Pence. Their Fury was not fatisfied with the Shame they thought to fix upon the whole Body of the Senate, thro' the Sides of this Confular. They continued to fill the City with Troubles and Divisions, either by hindering the Election of Confuls, or by reviving old Pretensions as the Seeds of new Commotions. Year of Rome 334. The Tribunes who Agrarian

Law.

Sempro-

rius condemn'd. Year of

Rome

333.

The next Year Sp. Mecilius fourth time Tribune of the People, and Metilius another Tribune of the People a third time, in order to prepetuate thempropose the selves in the Tribuneship, and procure to themselves a kind of Empire and Dominion for Life, renewed the Proposal of the Division of the Lands conquered from the Neighbours and Enemies of Rome. This was the common Bait with which the most feditious Tribunes used to lure the People. Rome, as we have faid before, built upon a foreign Ground, depending originally upon the City of Alba, had fcarce any Territory but what was won Sword in hand. The Patricians and those who had the greatest Share in the Government, under pretence of renting Parcels of it, had got into Poffession of the reft, and of all that lay conveniently for them, and had made it a kind of Patrimony of their own:

Long

Long Prescription had concealed these Usurpations, and it had been no easy Matter to discover the old Boundaries that separated what belong'd to the Public, from the Parcels let out to each particular Man. Yet the Tribunes were for dispossessing the old Pro- Year of prietors, even tho' they had raised Structures upon Rome those Lands. An Enquiry so hateful, flung the 335. chief Families of the Republic into great Consternation. The Senate met several times to think of Means to frustrate such Dangerous Proposals. faid, that Appius Claudius, tho' the youngest and Year of last of the Senate, offered an Advice which was not Rome difagreeable to that Body: He faid, that it was on- 336. ly in the Tribuneship it self, that a Relief against the Tyranny of the Tribunes was to be found; that all they had to do was to gain over only one of those Plebeian Magistrates to hinder the ill Designs of his Colleagues by his Opposition. That their way wou'd be to apply to the last of that College; that they being yet but new in business, and jealous of the Authority which Mecilius and Metilius took upon them, wou'd not be inflexible to the Senate's Careffes, and that perhaps they would gladly lend their Opposition, if only to shew their Power, and make fome Figure in the Government.

This advice was unanimously approved, and Appius was highly praised for having thus shewn that he did not degenerate from the Virtue of his Ancestors. Those Senators who had any Acquaintance with the Tribunes of the People, infinuate themselves into their Considence, and lay before them the Consusion they must breed in the State, and in every private Family, if they ever enter'd upon making a Distinction between the Lands granted by Romulus, and those which had been conquered from the Neighbours of the Republic for almost four hundred Years, and had in different Ages fallen into the Hands of private Persons: That the Design of a Law to make a persect Equality in the Fortune of all the Citizens, wou'd destroy the Subordination fo necessary in a State; and that the Rich, whether Patricians or Plebeians, wou'd not so easily suffer themfelves to be stript of the Estates they inherited from their Fore-fathers, or had honestly purchased of the lawful Owners; and that so unjust a Search, wou'd infallibly raife a Civil War, and perhaps cost the best Blood in the Commonwealth. In short, what with Intreaties and Remonstrances, they succeeded so well, that of the ten Tribunes they won over fix to oppose the Promulgation of the Law.

Mecilius and his Colleague, enraged to meet with Some of the this Opposition in their own Tribunal and College, Tribunes reproached their Colleagues as Traytors, Enemies oppose their to the People, and Slaves to the Senate. But spite Colleagues of all these Abuses, as the Opposition of but one

Tribune was fufficient to stop the proceeding of the other nine, and there were fix that declared against the Reception of the Law, Mecilius and his Colleague were forced to defift from this Enterprize.

The Senate, by means of this Intelligence with the Majority of the Tribunes, remained the Directors of Affairs the following Year alfo. L. Sextius, one of those Tribunes, in order to make his court to the People, having proposed to send a Colony to Vola, a little Town which they had lately taken, the other Tribunes opposed it strongly, and never fuffer any new Law to be offered, that was not first approved of by the Senate.

But this good Understanding between the Senate and Tribunes lasted not long: The Successors of those Magistrates of the People soon afterwards refumed the Profecution of the Division of the Lands, with even more Fury than Mecilius and his Colleague.

declared that during their Tribuneship, they wou'd

The Æqui having furprized Vola, the Conduct of that War was given to M. Postbumius Regillensis who was then military Tribune. That General knew how to make War; but he was stern, haugh-

Rome 337:

Year of

Year of Rome 338.

Pofthumius maffacred by bis Soldiers.

ty,

ty, proud of his Birth and Dignity, and carried that Distinction too high in a Common-wealth. where all the Citizens reckoned themselves equal. That General laid Siege to Vola, or rather tried to take it immediately by Storm. The Romans in those Days but rarely made regular Sieges: Their way commonly was, first to invest a Place on all Sides; then they led their Troops to the very Foot of the Walls, and by a general Attack, which divided the Attention and Forces of the Besieged, they endeavoured to make themselves Masters of the Place. Postbumius, before he led his Troops on to Rome this way of Assault, which was called Corona, be-339. cause the Town was surrounded on all Sides, pro-Livy 1. 4. mised them for their Encouragement, to give them c. 49. the Plunder if they took it. The Town was won; Zonaras. but Postbumius, who naturally hated the Plebeians, Flor. 1. 12 of whom the greatest part of his Army consisted, c. 22. broke his word with them, and fold all for the Pub-Vola relalic Treasury. ken.

Sextius, who had so much Interest as to get continued in the Tribuneship this Year also, proposed some Time afterwards in a full Assembly, that to make the People amends for the Military Tribune's Breach of Promise, a Colony shou'd at least be settled in that Place of those who by their Valour had contributed to the retaking of it, and he demanded that the Plebiscitum to be made for this Purpose shou'd grant those Soldiers the whole Territory of Vola. To intimidate the Senate, and so make this Proposal pass the more easily, he at the same time renewed the old Pretensions of the Division of the Lands, which the Tribunes never sailed to trump up, when they had a mind to make the Senate uneasy, or extort some new Privilege from them.

All the People applauded this Proposal. Postbumius, whom his Colleagues had sent for, that they might conjointly oppose the Enterprizes of the Tribunes of the People, being with the other Senators in that Assembly, where he saw many of his own

own Soldiers mingled in the Crowd, and demanding this Partition with great Clamours: Wo be to my Men, cried Postbumius aloud, if they do not bold their Peace. So proud a Saying, tho' in the Mouth of a General, offended the Senate no less than the Multitude: Sextius, bold and eloquent, took Advantage of the general Displeasure, and directing his Speech to the People: 'Did you not hear, faid he, the Threats which Postbumius gave our Soldiers, as if they were his Slaves? Can you after this doubt the Hatred and Contempt which the Patricians have for you? And yet these insolent and cruel

· Patricians are the Men you always prefer in the Distribution of Dignities, even before those who are daily defending your Privileges. Do not wonder if after so ungrateful a Preference, no body will give himself the trouble to take care of What can any body expect from a weak inconstant Multitude, who reward none but those

Tumult in who infult them the most intolerably? the Army.

This Discourie enflamed the public Animosity, which together with Postbumius's Threats ran to his very Army. The Soldiers were already but too much incenfed at his having deprived them of the Plunder of Vola, contrary to his Promise; they no fooner heard what had passed in the Forum, but they cried, that the Republic was fostering a Tyrant in her Bosom; and the whole Army was in a Commotion little different from an open Sedition.

P. Sextius, Quaftor, having in his General's Abfence gone about to arrest one Soldier who was more mutinous than the rest, received a Blow with a Stone from him, and his Comrades rescued him out of the Hands of those that had laid hold of him. Postbumius, informed of this Tumult, haftens to the Camp; but he exasperated the Soldiers more than ever by the Strictness of his Enquiries, and the Cruelty of his Punishments. After very rigid Examinations, he commanded the most guilty of the Soldiers to be put to Death under the Hurdle; their Comrades furiously tear them from those who had seized them, and set them at Liberty: These are new Leaders for the Sedition: The whole Camp rises. Postbumius, transported with Anger, comes down from his Tribunal, Liv. 1. 4. and preceded by his Lictors breaks thro' the Press, Flor. 1. and goes to lay Hands on the Criminals; but he c. 22. finds no Respect left to his Person, nor Obedience Year of to his Order; Force is opposed with Force, both Rome Sides come to Blows, and in this Disorder the Ge. 339.

neral is flain by his own Soldiers.

However odious Posthumius had been, the People as well as the Senate abhorred so black an Action, and the Consulate falling to Cornelius and L. Furius Medullinus, those Magistrates were appointed Year of to try the Criminals, and to instict an exemplary Rome Punishment upon them. The Consuls however shew-340. ed great Moderation in this Affair; and, to avoid exasperating the Spirits of the People, resolv'd to punish only a small Number of the most Mutinous, who, 'tis believ'd, killed themselves. Those wise Livy 1. 4. Magistrates thought it more prudent to suppose the C. 51. Army in general to be innocent, than to drive them into an open Revolt by too strict an Examination.

It had been happy if the Senate and Confuls had, to so prudent a Management, added the Partition of the Territory of Vola among such Soldiers and Citizens as had remained in their Duty.

That had been the furest way to have silenced all ings at the factious Complaints of the Tribunes of the Peo-Nobles. ple, and to have insensibly taken off their Claims upon the Public Lands and Commons, which, after all, it was almost impossible for the Proprietors to justify their original Title to. But the People saw with Indignation, that the private Design of the Senate and Nobility was to keep them always in Poverty, as well for the sake of their own Interest, as to make them more submissive and dependent. And the Tribunes, to feed their Resentment, were perpetually declaring in all the Assemblies, that Rome wou'd never be free while the Patricians kept the public Lands, and usurped all the Dignities of the State to themselves.

Almost continued Wars against the Æqui and Volfci, the Plague which succeeded this first Calamity, and which produced a Famine, took the People off during the following Years from giving Ear to those seditious Discourses. But Peace and Plenty were no sooner restored to the Commonwealth, but other Tribunes created new Dissentions.

Three of those Plebeian Magistrates, of the Name of Icilius, all three Kinsmen, and of a Family in which a Hatred of the Patricians was hereditary, undertook to deprive them of the Quæstorship, which Sp. Icilius till then had never been out of the first Order: They L. Icilius, first obtained to have the Election brought into the Comitia by Tribes. After having fed the People with Hopes of fine Colonies, and the Partition of the Lands, they publickly declared, that they must expect none of those Benefits during their Tribune-to be common among all the Citizens of one and the same Republic, they cou'd not at least aspire to the Quæstorship. The People, animated by their Liv. 1. 4. Tribunes, gave their Votes to 2. Silius, P. Ælius 54. Id.1.6. and P. Papius, all three Plebeians, who were the first Plebeian Quæstors of that Order; and of the Patricians that ship, if, of all the Dignities which by right ought

Quastors. put up for that Dignity, none but Caso Fabius Am-

The Tribunes of the People look'd upon this Advantage as a Victory gained over the Nobility. They flattered themselves that the Quæstorship wou'd now open them away to the Military Tribuenship, the Consulate and the Triumph, The Icilia cried publickly, that the time was at length come when the Honours of the Republic shou'd be shared equally among the People and the Patricians. In the next Election, they wou'd not even so much as hear of the Consulship, only because that Dignity was yet reserved to the Nobles and Patricians. The Senate was forced to consent to the Choice of Military

tary Tribunes, who indeed had the fame Power as the Confuls, but whose Dignity was more agreeable to the People, because themselves were allowed to put up for it. The Icilii particularly aspired to it openly. The Senate, alarmed at their ambitious Deligns, annex'd two Conditions to the electing of Military Tribunes, which tacitly excluded the Icilii: the first contained, that no Plebeian shou'd stand for Decree of the Military Tribuneship, when he had the same against the Year had the Office of Tribune of the People; the Icilii. other, that no Tribune of the People shou'd be Year of continued two Years together in the same Employ-Rome, ment.

The Icilii plainly faw they alone were the Men the Senate aimed at; they loft all Hopes of arriving at that first Office in the Commonwealth, and when they had lost it themselves, they seemed indifferent whether any other Plebeian obtained it or no. Perhaps they wou'd even have been mortified to have feen that great Dignity in any other Plebeian Family, before their own had been honoured with it. Be it as it will, no confiderable Plebeian appeared as a Candidate; and the Senate had the Cunning to get fome of the most wretched of the Populace to stand, at the same time that they asked that Office for Senators and Patricians illustrious for their Valour.

The People, difgusted with the Meanness of the Division Pretenders of their own Order, gave all their Voices between to the Nobility; and C. Julius Iulus, Corn. Cossus, the Senate and C. Servilius Abala were declared Military Tri- and milibunes; but they did not long enjoy that Sovereign bunes. Dignity. The Volsci having set on foot a powerful Year of Army, the Senate according to Custom resolv'd to Rome fend a Dictator against them. As the absolute Au- 345; thority of that Magistrate in a manner swallowed up the Power of all the Inferior Officers, Julius and Cornelius Military Tribunes opposed his Election. and represented that they found in themselves sufficient Courage and Experience to command an Army, and that it was unjust to deprive them of a Dignity which

which they had fo lately obtained by all the Votes of their Fellow-Citizens.

The Senate, exasperated at their Opposition, and Refusal to name a Dictator, had Recourse to the Tribunes of the People, as they had done before upon the like Occasion. But the Tribunes of this Year observ'd a different Conduct from their Predecessors; and tho' they were overjoyed to see this Diffention between the Military Tribunes and the Senate, they answered with a scornful Raillery, that it was a Shame for fo powerful a Body to implore the Aid of beggarly Plebeians, and of Men whom the Nobility scarce thought worthy to be reckoned their Fellow-Citizens; that if ever the Offices and Honours of the Republic were common among all the Romans, without Distinction of Birth or Wealth, then the People and their Magistrates shou'd know how to force a Respect to the Senate's Decrees; but that till then they wou'd have no hand in the different Pretenfions of the Senate and the Military Tribunes.

These Contests drawing to on End, and the Enemies still advancing towards the Frontier, Servilius Abala, the third Military Tribune, declared publickly, that the good of his Country was more dear to him than the Friendship of his Colleagues, and that if they wou'd not fairly consent to chuse a Dictator, he wou'd take upon him to name one himsels:

Liv. 1. 4. And accordingly being supported by the Authority 56, 57. of the whole Senate, he named for Dictator P. Cornelius, who afterwards chose him himself for General of the Horse.

The War was not of long Continuance; the Volfci were defeated near the City of Antium; their Territory was plundered, and a great Number of Prisoners taken. After this Expedition the Dictator laid down his Post; but the two Tribunes, discontented with the Senate for having deprived them of the Glory they hoped to have acquired in this War, instead of proposing the Election of Consuls for

for the ensuing Year, only demanded Military Tribunes, as the most zealous Tribune of the People wou'd have done.

The Senate, who were always fearful that the People wou'd at length be brought to give that Dignity, either to their own Tribunes or to some of the principal Plebeians, were touched to the quick, to see their Interests betrayed even by those of their own Order. But as it was not in their Power to annul the Publication of the Assembly made by the Magistrates of the Republic, they obliged the chief of their own Body, and such as were most agreeable to the People for their Moderation and Valour, to demand the Tribuneship. And notwithstanding all the Brigues of the Plebeian Tribunes, none but Pa-Year of tricians were chosen for Military Tribunes, and C. Rome Valerius, C. Servilius, L. Furius, and Fabius Vibu-Diodor. lanus were raised to that high Office.

The Senate kept the same Advantage the following Year, and were again powerful enough in the Election to procure the same Post for P. Cornelius, L. Valerius, Cn. Cornelius and Fabius Ambustus, all Year of Patricians, and of the best Families in the Common-Rome wealth.

It is impossible to express the Rage and Fury that the Tribunes of the People shew'd at seeing themfelves fo long excluded from an Honour to which they were capable of being admitted. They took the Opportunity of a new War which the Senate wanted to make against the Veientes, to wreak their Revenge. The Inhabitants of Veil had carried off fome Booty without any previous Dec'aration of War. Ambassadors had been fent to demand Satisfaction for this Infult; but instead of excusing or justifying their Incursions, they drove away those Ambassadors with Contempt. The Senate, yet more provoked at this infolent Behaviour than at their Robberies, proposed it to the People to revenge this Injury, and to carry their Arms into Tuscany. The People, poisoned by their Tribunes, shewed a very great Indifference B b 2

Indifference for this Propofal. They faid it was not prudent to engage in a new War, while that of the Volsci was not yet terminated; that the Commonwealth had not Forces enough to withstand two fuch warlike Nations at the fame time; that not a Year pass'd without their fighting some Battel; that these frequent Engagements exhausted the purest Blood of Rome, and cut off all their Youth; neither did the Plebeians, who filled the Legions, draw the least Advantage from these continual Wars.

The Tribunes, on their fide, cried in all the Affemblies, that the Senate perpetuated the War only to keep the Plebeians out of the City, for fear, if they were at Rome, they shou'd revive the just Pretensions they had to the public Lands, or by the Numerousness of their Suffrages raise their Tribunes to the chief Dignities in the Republic. And in

- fhort, faid those feditious Magistrates to them, you need feek your real Enemies no where but
- in Rome. The greatest War you have to maintain, is that which the Senate has so long carried on against the Roman People.

Senate fixes the Soldiers Pay.

The Senate finding fo much Repugnance in the People's Mindsto the War with the Veientes, thought it proper to wait a more favourable Opportunity to regain the Confidence of the Multitude, and remove the Complaints they made against the length of the They resolved to provide for the Subsistance of the Soldier in fuch a manner, that they shou'd not be at all obliged for it to the Tribunes. Roman Citizens, till then, used to go to the War at their own Expence; every Man was forced, out of his own little Inheritance, to maintain himfelf as well during the Campaign as in Winter-Quarters; and oftentimes when the Campaign was too long, the Lands, especially those of the Poor Plebeians, This occasioned Borrowing, Usury lay fallow. multiplyed by Interests, and afterwards Complaints and Seditions of the People. The Senate, to prevent these Disorders, decreed of themselves, and without without being importuned by the Tribunes, that for the future the Soldiers shou'd be paid out of the public Money; and that to furnish this Expence, a new Tax should be raised, from which no Citizen whatfoever shou'd be exempt.

Upon the first News of this Senatusconfultum, the Year of People were transported with Joy; they ran from Rome all Parts to the Gates of the Palace. Some kiffed 347. the Hands of the Senators, others called them the fub fin. Fathers of the People, and all protested they were Diod. 1. 4. ready to spill the very last Drop of their Blood for their Country, which they now looked upon as a Mother liberal and generous to all her Children.

In this universal Gladness, the Tribunes of the The Tri-People were remarkable for their fullen and envious bunes mur-Countenances. The Union of all the Orders, hin-mur at it. dered them from making themselves considerable. As they never shone more than in the Divisions of the State, they gave out that the Senate bestowed Largesses at a very cheap Rate; that the People must be very blind if they did not perceive that this their Pay wou'd come out of their own Pockets; nay, that it was not just for those who till then had been at the Wars at their own Charge, and had compleated the Time of their Service, to be taxed to pay the new Soldiers that succeeded them in the Armies; that for their Parts they were firmly refolved never to pay this new Imposition; and that they offered their Service, and the whole Authority which their Office gave them, to defend those who wou'd follow their Example.

They hoped by means of the Power they had over the Minds of the People, to get them to reject this Favour, which was odious to them, only because it came from the Senate. But a certain and immediate Benefit, and especially the Example of the chief Men among them, who readily paid their Contingents, prevailed above all the feditious Harangues of the Tribunes. The Senatusconfultum Year of

B b 3

was Rome

347.

The History of the Revolutions Book VI.

330

was ratified by a Plebiscitum, and the general Confent of the People. Every Man ran eagerly to pay a flight Tribute proportioned to his Estate, which was to bring him in a considerable Advantage in return. As there were in those Days but little coined Money, Carts loaden with Brass were every Day seen going to the Treasury with the Contributions of private Men, which the Treasurers received by weight.

End of the Sixth Book.

THE

HISTORY

OFTHE

REVOLUTIONS

That happened in the GOVERNMENT

OF THE

ROMAN REPUBLIC.

BOOK VII.

The Romans invest the City of Veii, which costs them a Ten Years Siege. A Tribune of the People proposes to make that City a second Rome, by sending half of the Senate, of the Knights, and of the People, to inhabit it. The Senators, with much Struggling, bring this Design to nothing. Camillus being attack'd by the Tribunes, leaves Rome, and takes Refuge in Ardea. An Army of Gau's, commanded by Brennus, penetrates into Tuscany, and besieges Clusium. The Tuscans beg Succour of the Romans. These latter solicit Brennus by Ambassadors, who, through their Imprudence, oblige that General to declare War against their Country. The Battel of Allia. Rome taken and burnt. The Siege of the Capitol. Camillus Distator. The Gauls cut in Pieces. Rome rebuilt. Manlius Capitolinus, accused of aspiring to be made King of Rome,

Rome, is thrown headlong from the Top of the Capitol. After a great many Cabals and Stirs, which the Plebeians had in vain made, to procure one of the Places in the Confulship for their own Body, they at last obtain what they so earnestly desire; and owe this Success to the Tears of a Woman. Sextius is the first Plebeian Consul. The Præture: The Curule Ædility. These two new Dignities are appropriated to the Patricians, in Exclusion of the Plebeians. C. Licinius Stolo, Author of the Lex Licinia, is the first that is condemned in a Fine for violating it.

Liv. in fine 2 1. 14. Diod, 1. 14.

ESIDES the Ease of the People, the Senate in allotting Funds for the Payment of the Troops, had at the fame Time a View of enabling themselves to carry on the War farther, and maintain it longer. Before this Regulation, they did not fo much make War as Incursions, which were generally terminated by one Battel. These petty Wars lasted not above twenty or thirty Days, and oftentimes not fo long; the Soldiers, for want of Pay, not being able to keep the Field for a longer Time together. But when the Senate faw it in their Power to keep up a regular Body of Troops at all times, they formed greater Projects, and laid a Design to besiege Veii, one of the strongeft Places in Italy, the Bulwark of Tuscany, and which yielded to Rome neither in the Valour nor Wealth of its Inhabitants.

Veii. Year of Rome 347.

The Tuscans lived in the Form of a Republic like the Sabines, the Volsci, the Romans, and most of the other Nations of Italy. The City of Veii only, which was the most powerful of that Community, had lately chosen themselves a King; and this Change in the Government, had made the other petty States of that Province less zealous for its Interests.

The Romans, informed of this Indifference, refolved to take Revenge for the Devastations which the the Veientes had made in the Territory of Rome. After having put an advantageous Conclusion to the War against the Volsci, they made it their whole Care to raise such a powerful Army, as might be answerable to the Greatness of this Enterprize.

Livy tells us, they chose eight military Tribunes Dec. 1.1. on purpose; which had never been known before in 3 c. 1. the Republic, tho' other Historians take notice but of six. We find another Difference in Authors, upon occasion of this Siege: Some place the Tribunate of M. Furius Camillus, and of Appius Claudius Crassus, in the 348th Year of Rome; and others say, they did not attain that Dignity till the 350th. Neither is it very certain whether Camillus Val. Max. was not rather Censor this Year, than Military Tribune. Whichsoever of these different Opinions be right, we shall find by the Sequel of this History, that these two Magistrates had the chief Glory of this War.

Appius was Grandson of the Decemvir, and Son of another Appius Claudius, who was military Tribune in the 329th Year from the Foundation of Rome. This Conformity of both Names, which we fo often meet with in the Senators of the Claudian Family, shews that they were all the eldest Sons of their House, according to the Practice of Rome, where the eldeft Son always bore the fame Name as his Father; whereas the younger were diftinguished by Names, either from the Order of their Birth, or from the Time or Hour in which they were named. Appius stay'd at Rome to curb the Tribunes, and to suppress the usual Seditions of the People; Camillus in quality of military Tribune, and afterwards as Dictator, brought this Siege to a happy Iffue.

We may judge of the Strength of the Place by Year of the Length of the Siege, which lasted ten whole Rome Years, with various Success. The Roman Gene-348. War in rals, rather than discontinue it, built Lodgments to Winter. defend the Soldiers against the Severities of Winter.

The

The Tribunes murmur.

The Tribunes had no fooner heard of this, but they immediately made it a Pretence to raise their common Outcry against the Senate. They faid in every Affembly, That indeed they always feared, the Gifts of the Senate concealed fome hidden Poison: That this new Pay, which they valued themselves fo much upon, was only a Bait which the Patricians had made use of to deceive the People: That indeed it had been the Price of their Liberty: That the military Tribunes, by detaining the Soldiers in the Camp during Winter, had visibly no other End, but to deprive the People's Party of the Help of their Votes: That the Senate and Patricians would now reign despotically in all the Assemblies: But that they ought to make them know, that they governed Men who were free; and that the People should order the Generals to bring the Troops back to Rome at the end of every Campaign, fo that the poor Citizen who daily expos'd his Life in the Defence of his Country, might enjoy a little Rest, have the Pleasure of seeing his House, his Wife, and his Children, and give his Voice in the Election of the Magistrates.

Appius's Speech against the Tribunes. Liv. 1. 5. c. 3. Plut. in Cam. c. 19.

Appius, whom the military Tribunes had left at Rome to oppose the Measures of the Tribunes of the People, being informed of these seditious Speeches, called an Affembly, and complained at first with a great deal of Gentleness and Moderation. That the Forum was become the public Rendezvouz of all the mutinous Spirits, and the Theatre of all Seditions: Orof. 1. 2. That the Senate, the Magistrates, and the Laws were publickly despis'd; and that the Tribunes of the People had now nothing farther to do, but to go into the very Camp to corrupt the Army, and draw it away from its Obedience to its Generals. He reproached them, That they studied nothing but how to break off all Union between the feveral Orders of the State: That they were the only Authors of all Divisions; That they were every Day fomenting them by their feditious Harangues; and that, greater Enemies to Rome than the Veientes themselves. they matter'd little how the Siege went, provided they hinder'd the Patrician Generals from obtaining Glory in it. "We should either not have undertaken this Siege, added he, or we should continue it. Shall we abandon our Camp, our Legions, " the Forts we have erected from Distance to Dist-" ance, our Towers, our Mantelets and our Gabions; and fo have all the fame Works to begin " again the next Summer? But who will promife " your Tribunes, who give you fuch wholfome 46 Advice, that all Tuscany, facrificing the Aversion they have for the King of the Veientes to the true Interest of their Country, will not take Arms, " and come to their Affistance? Can you so much 44 as doubt that the Veientes, during the Intermission of the Siege, will put Troops and Ammunition into the Town? Who can affure you, that they will not even be before-hand with you the next Year, and that grown stronger, and provoked by the Ravage we have made of their Lands, they will not come and plunder ours? But what " Contempt will it not bring upon the Republic, if the Nations bordering upon Rome, who are now e jealous of her Greatness, shall find that your Geor nerals, fetter'd by the new Laws of your Tribunes, dare not finish a Siege, nor keep the Field a Moment after the fine Weather is over? Whereas nothing will make the Roman People more dread-44 ful, than their shewing that no Severity of the " Seafons is able to put a Stop to their Enterprizes; and that they are firmly refolved to conquer, or die at the Foot of the Enemies Ramparts?

The People, prejudiced by their Tribunes, gave Anadvanno great heed to Appius's Representation; but a Loss tageous which the Romans suffered at the Siege, brought about what that prudent Discourse could not effect.
The Veientes, in a Sally, surprized the Besiegers, slew a great Number of them, set Fire to their Machines, and ruined most of their Works. This News, instead

Rome 350.

Plut. in

instead of depressing the Spirits of the Romans, infpired them with new Ardor for the Continuation of the Siege. The Knights, whom the State was to Year of furnish with Horses, offered to mount themselves at their own Expence. The People after their Exam-Camillo. ple cried out, they were ready to march to supply V. Orof. the Places of the Soldiers that were loft, and fwore 1. 2. c. 19 they would never leave the Camp till the City was The Caval taken. The Senate gave great Praises to All. It ry now for was resolved to allow Pay to all the Voluntiers that time paid would go to the Siege. At the same Time they out of the fettled a particular Pay for the Horse, and this was the first Time that the Cavalry was paid out of the Treasury public Treasury.

Liv. 1. 5. C. 7.

The Tribunes of the People faw, not without great Uneafiness and Jealousy, that the Loss just mentioned, instead of raising the Complaints and Murmurs of the Multitude, had only increased the Warmth and Courage of all Orders and Degrees, for the carrying on of the Siege. But a new Defeat furnished them with an Occasion and Pretence of inveighing against the Senate with Impunity.

Year of Rome 351. Jealousy betaveen the two Generals. quences sbereof.

The Capenates and Falisci, People of Tuscany, nearest to the Veientes, and consequently most concerned in their Preservation, armed privately. They joined their Troops, furprized and attacked the Enemies Camp. L. Virginius, and M. Sergius, both military Tribunes, commanded at this Siege. The The Confe- Jealoufy, fo common in an equal Authority, had fet them at Variance: Each had a Body of Troops under his Command, which were divided as it were into two different Camps. The Enemies on one Side fall upon that of Sergius, at the fame time that the Befieged make a Sally by Agreement, and attack The Soldier who thinks he has all the the other. Forces in Tuscany to deal with, is dismay'd, fights faintly, and rather to defend his own Life, than to attack his Enemy's. It is not long before he feeks his Safety in a hasty Flight, all give Way, and the Rout becomes general. None but Virginius could fave fave his Colleague's Army. His Troops were ranged in Order of Battel; but the Animofity between those two Generals was so great, that Sergius chose rather to perish, than to ask the Assistance of one he hated. Virginius on his Side, overjoyed to see him beaten, refused his own Officers leave to go to his Succour, unless he would fend and beg it. The Enemy improved the Division of the Leaders: Sergius's Army sled in Disorder to Rome, which was but six Leagues distant from the Camp, and Sergius went thither himself, not so much to justify his own Conduct, as to set forth the Blackness of that of his Colleague.

The Senate in this Confusion, fent Orders to Vir-Military ginius to leave his Army under the Command of his Tribunes Lieutenants, and repair immediately to Rome, to an-Summoned fwer to the Complaints which his Colleague prefer from the red against him. The Dispute was manag'd with Rome. great Acrimony, and the two military Tribunes ran into Invectives against each other. The Senate finding them equally guilty, the one in not having fought with fufficient Courage, and the other in fuffering his Fellow-Citizens to perish, rather than save his Colleague, decreed that all the Tribunes of that Year should lay down their Dignity, and the People immediately proceed to a new Election. The two Tribunes at first argued against paying Obedience to this Decree, under pretence that their Authority was not expired. The Tribunes of the People laid hold on this Occasion to enlarge their Power, and threaten'd the two Generals that they would cause them to be imprisoned, if they did not obey the Senate's Orders. Servilius Abala, the first Military Tribune, full of Indignation at the haughty manner in which these Plebeian Magistrates treated his Colleagues: "You have no Right, fays he, to threaten those who are " fuperior to you in Dignity. My Colleagues are not ignorant of the Submission we all owe to the Decrees of the Senate, and if they are refractory to its Commands, I will name a Dictator, who by his ab-" folute

" folute Authority shall be able, without your In-" terpolition, to force them to quit their Office.

They lay The two Tribunes finding it impossible to relift down their this unanimous Consent of the Senate, abdicated their Magistra Magistracy, and the People proceeded to a new Election.

Accused.

But the Tribunes of the People were not fatisfied with the Deposal of those two Generals; and while those who were chosen in their Room, led a new Army to the Siege of Veii, those Plebeian Magistrates fummoned Sergius and Virginius before the Assem-They forgot nothing upon this bly of the People. Occasion, that might inflame the Minds of the Multitude, not only against the two Persons accused, but also against the whole Body of the Senate.

Year of Rome 352.

They represented with as much Art as Malice, that the fole Aim of that Society was to diminish the Number of the People, to weaken its Power, to hinder its Assemblies, or at least to defer the convening of them. That the late Misfortune ought not to be look'd upon as one of those common Mischances which may happen to the very greatest Captains, but that it was contrived in consequence of this secret Defign laid to destroy the People: That the Generals, after having spent several Campaigns in the Siege or Blockade of Veii, had fuffered their Gabions to be burnt, their Forts to be taken, and all their Works to be ruined, only to prolong the War: That after this, Sergius's Camp was fold to the Enemy: That this General, rather than defire Aid of his Colleague. had chose to let his Soldiers be cut to Pieces; and that Virginius beheld this Rout of the Legions as a Victory, which without his drawing his Sword, delivered him and his Party from fo many Enemies as there were Plebeians in those different Troops: That after so infamous an Action, the Senate yet fancied they could impose upon the People, by obliging the two Generals to leave the Command of their Armies: But that the People ought to shew by a severe Punishment of the Criminals, that they were not to be deceived ceived by so gross an Artifice: That in order to prevent the ill Designs of the Nobility for the suture, they should fill the Military Tribunate with brave Plebeians, who would be equally watchful for the Desence of their Country, and the particular Preservation of the Populace.

sergius in vain alledged in his Excuse, the ordi-Condemn's nary Chance of War, the Terror that was spread through his Army, and the Treachery of his Colleague, who had abandoned, and as it were given him up to the Enemy, who attack'd him on two different Sides. No Distinction was made between Missortune and Guilt; he was condemned to pay a Liv. 1. 53 great Fine as well as Virginius, tho' he pleaded that c. 12. it was unjust to punish him for the Faults of his Colleague.

The Tribunes of the People, taking occasion of the general Animosity they raised against the Patricians, never left representing to the Multitude in all the Assemblies, that the Time was come to free themfelves from the Tyranny of the Senate. That they should take the Sovereign Authority, and chief Dignities of the Republic, out of the Hands of the Sergii and Virginii, and give them to Plebeians worthy of those honourable Employments. They exclaim in Public, that the Liberty of the People was in Danger. They make Interest, and form Cabals in private: In a word, they so bestir themselves, Plebeians that in the two next Elections, they get Plebeians named for named for military Tribunes. A new Revolution military in the Government of the Republic, but the Confe-Year of quences whereof were fatal to the State, in feveral Rome Advantages which the Enemies of Rome gained over 353, 354. the Armies commanded by Plebeians.

A contagious Distemper succeeded these Deseats. A Plague. The People in Consternation had Recourse to the Year of Gods; the Temples were crowded Day and Night Rome with Men, Women and Children, imploring their 354. Clemency. The Duumvirs, after consulting the TheLestifacred Books of the Sybils, ordered the Lestisternium. Sternium.

This

This was an antient Ceremony, in which they took Liv. 1. 5. the Statues of the Gods down from their Niches; c. 13. Aug they for eight Days together served them up magde Civ. Dei. 1. 3. nificent Repasts, as if they had been capable of making use of them; the Citizens, each according to his c. 170 Ability, kept open House. They invited indifferently Friends and Foes; Strangers were particularly well received; they fet the Prisoners at Liberty; and it was a Point of Conscience, not to take them up again after the Festival was over.

The Patricians taking Advantage of this Dispofition in Mens Minds, turned these Misfortunes of the Republic into a religious Mystery. They ascribed them to the Wrath of the Gods, who, they faid, were displeased, that in the last Elections sufficient Regard was not had to the Nobility, who alone had Inspection over Sacrifices. These Reasons. much more powerful than all the Orations of the Tribunes of the People, prevailed over the Minds of the Multitude. Every Body look'd upon the Misfortunes of the Republic, as the infallible Interpreters of the Will of the Gods; and for fear of provoking them more, they failed not, in the next Election, to restore the Military Tribunate to the Patricians alone.

Year of Rome 355, 356. ces of the Siege of Veii.

Year of Rome 357. Camillus Distator.

The Siege went on but flowly, and the whole Power of the Roman Arms was spent in ravaging the Lands of the Enemy. The War was yet more Consequen- unsuccessful the following Year; and they oblig'd the Military Tribunes, with whom they were diffatisfied, to abdicate their Dignity, under Colour that fome Ceremony had been omitted in the Auspices taken for their Election: A Pretence which the two Parties made Use of by Turns, to depose the Magistrates they did not like. They had Recourse upon this Occasion, as in a public Calamity, to a Distator. M. Furius Cammillus was raised to this Supreme Dignity; which he owed only to the Need wherein the Republic thought she stood of so great a Captain: A Time when superior Merit, without making making the least Interest, naturally falls into its right Place. It had already been observed, that in all the Employments which CAMILLUS had shared with Colleagues, his great Valour and extraordinary Capacity had gained him the Honour of the whole Command, as if he had governed in chief; and it was afterwards found, that during his Dictatorships, he ruled with fo much Gentleness and Moderation. that the Officers who obey'd his Orders, thought they took part in his Authority. He named for plut, in General of the Horse P. Cornelius Scipio; and at the vita Cam. fame time raised a great Body of Troops. The Diod. 1. People who should first list themselves under his 24. Banners; every Body was for going to the Wars with a general whom Victory had never deferted. The Allies themselves sent to offer him a strong Supply of their choicest Youth. The Dictator immediately repaired to the Camp before Veii: His mere Presence restored the Military Discipline, which had been very much flacken'd fince the Division and Defeat of the Military Tribunes. The Place was more straitly inclosed, and by his Order the Forts repaired which the Enemy had ruined. He then marched against the Falisci and the Capenates, whom he defeated in a pitch'd Battel; and after this Victory, which left him the Country open, he returned to the Siege, and pushed it on with great Vigour.

The Besieged defended themselves with no less Courage. The Dictator, fearing he should not carry by Affault or open Force, a Town which had a whole Army for its Garrison, had Recourse to Mines and Sapping. His Soldiers, by hard Labour, and without being discovered by the Besieged open'd themselves a private Passage to the very Caftle; thence they fpread themselves through the Town; one Body fell upon the Rear of those that still defended the Walls; another broke down the Veil taken Gates; and the whole Army rushed into the Place. 357th The unhappy Veientes felt the first Fury of the Con- Year of queror. They spared only those whom they found unarmed; and the Soldier, yet more covetous than cruel, fell to plunder with the Leave of the General.

The Length of the Siege, the Dangers there had been in it, the Uncertainty of Success, all this made the News of the taking this Town be receiv'd at Rome with the utmost Transport and Joy. Temples were filled with Roman Ladies, and four Days were fet apart for a publick Thanksgiving to the Gods; which had never before been practis'd Camillus', in the Republic upon the greatest Success. Triumph. very Triumph of the Dictator had fomething particular in it. Camillus appeared in a stately Chariot drawn by Four Horses, all Milk-white.

This Singularity displeased the People; and in the midst of the Praises they gave the Dictator, they could not, without a fecret Indignation, behold this chief Magistrate, affecting a Pomp formerly reserved to the Royalty, and fince the Expulsion of the Kings, confecrated only to the Worship of the Gods. This diminished their Esteem and Affection for CAMILLUS: And the Refistance he afterwards made against some Proposals of one of the Tribunes, finished the making him odious to the Multitude.

T. Sicinius Dentatus, Tribune of the People, probinders the posed to make a second Rome of the City of Veii, by fending thither one half of the Senate, Knights, and People to dwell there. He represented its Situation, Strength, Magnificence of its Buildings, and its Territory more extensive and fruitful than that of Rome herfelf: And he added, that the Romans might the more eafily by this Means preserve their

358. Liv. 1. 5. Conquests. Plut. vita

· Camillus

Romans

from re-

peopling

Year of Rome

Camilli

Veii

The People, always fond of Novelties, receiv'd these Proposals with great Demonstrations of Joy. The Affair, according to Custom, was carried first CAMILLUS, who was but just before the Senate. out of his Dictatorship, oppos'd it strongly. but that it had been a great Honour to him, to fee fo great a Town that he had conquer'd, inhabited by Romans; and he might consider, that the more Inhabitants it had, the more Witnesses there would be of his Glory. But he thought it was a Crime to carry the Roman People into a Captive Land, and to prefer the Country of the Vanquish'd to that which was Victor. He added, it seem'd to him impossible, that two such powerful Cities should long continue in Peace, live under the same Laws, and yet form but one Republic: that these two Cities would by degrees grow two different States; which, after having made War upon one another, would at length become a Prey to their Common Enemies.

The Senators and principal of the Nobility, mov'd Year of with the Remonstrances of this chief Citizen of the Rome Republic, declared they would die in the Presence 359. of the Roman People, before they would leave their Country. All of them, both old and young, went to the Place where the People was affembled; and mixing with the Crowd, conjured them with Tears in their Eyes, not to abandon that august City, which was one Day to be Miftress of the Whole World, and to which the Gods had made fuch glorious Promifes. They then pointed to the Capitol, and ask'd the Plebeians, if they could have the Heart to leave Jupiter, Vesta, Romulus, and the other Guardian Deities of the City, to follow Sicinius, who, by this fatal Division, only sought to ruin the Commonwealth. In a word these prudent Senators having taken the People by Motives of Religion, they could not withstand them. They yielded, though unwillingly, to that inward Power, which is constantly produced by the Prejudices of Educa-Q Sicinius's Propofal was rejected by Plurality of Voices; and the Senate, as a kind of Reward to the People for their Compliance, decreed, by the 360th Advice of CAMILLUS, that seven Acres of the Year of Lands of the Veientes, should be distributed to every Rome. Master of a Family; and in order to induce free Livy 1. 5. Persons to marry, and to enable them to raise Chil- . 30. dren, that might in Time be serviceable to the Com-Cc 2 monwealth, monwealth, a Proportion should be allowed to them also.

Concord restored.

The People, charm'd with this Liberality, shower'd great Praises upon the Senate. Concord was again seen flourishing between those two Orders; nay, the People, in Deserence to the Senate, consented even that the Consulate should be restored Under the Government of these Patrician Magistrates, 260, 361. the Æqui were conquer'd; and the Falisci submitted to the Republic. All these Advantages were as-cribed to the Wisdom and Valour of Camillus. They were so many fresh Injuries with respect to the Tribunes, who could not forgive him this Union between the People and Senate, which they look'd upon as his Work, and as the Extinction of their Authority.

The Tribunes accuse Camillus. They would gladly have eased themselves of him, who alone was more formidable to them than the whole Senate. But it was a difficult Thing to attack a Man revered by his Fellow-Citizens for his Virtues, adored by the Soldiers, and never found to have any other Interest at Heart beside that of his Country.

His Piety foon after furnished them with a Pretence, which their Envy and Hatred could not help them to. That General, just before he order'd his Troops to mount the Affault at the Siege of Veij, had made a Vow to confecrate the tenth Part of the Booty to Apollo. But when the City was won, amidft the Disorder and Confusion of the Plunder, he remember'd not his Vow. And when the Tenderness of his Conscience recalled the Memory of it, every Thing was gone. There was no possible way of obliging the Soldiers to reftore Effects which they had either confumed, or otherwise parted with. this Perplexity the Senate proclaimed, that all who had any Fear of the Gods, should themselves compute the Value of their Booty, and bring the tenth Part of that Value to the Questors, in order to make an Offering worthy of the Piety and Majesty of the Roman People.

This Contribution, exacted at a wrong Time, irritated the People against Camillus. Their Tribunes greedily feiz'd this Occasion of falling upon him. They recalled the Memory of his Triumph, in which, contrary to Custom, he appeared in a Chariot drawn by four white Horses. They added, that this haughty Patrician, whose Policy it was to keep the People always in Indigence, feigned to have vowed to the Gods the tenth Part of the Plunder at Veij, only for a Pretence of Tithing the Wealth of the Soldier, and dreining the People. Hereupon one of those Tribunes, called Lucius Apu-362d Year leius, summon'd him before the Assembly of the & Rome. People, and accused him of having embezzled out of the Pillage at Veij, certain Brass Gates that were feen in his House.

CAMILLUS, furprized at this new kind of Accu-Plut. in fation, affembled his Friends, and the chief of his Cam. Tribe, at his own House; and conjured them not to fuffer their General to be condemned upon fo weak a Pretence. These Plebeians, preposses'd by their Tribunes, after having taken Counsel among themselves, reply'd, that they would willingly pay the Fine to which he should be condemned; but that it was not in their Power to get him acquitted. CAMILLUS, detefting their Weakness, resolved rather to banish himself from Rome of his own Ac-Camillus cord, than to have the Shame of Condemnation af-goes into fixed to his Name. He at his Departure embraced Exile. his Wife and Children; and without being followed by any Body of Note, came to the Gate of the Ci-It is related, that he then stopped, and turning towards the Capitol, prayed the Gods, that his ungrateful Countrymen might quickly repent their Year of having repay'd his Services with fo fharp an Out-Rome rage; and that their own Calamities might oblige 162. them to recal him. He retired to Ardea, a City Plut. in. not far from Rome, where he heard that he was fin-vita Cam. Cc3

Val. Max. ed Fifteen thousand Asses, which may amount to

1. 5. c. 3. about 150 Crowns of our Money.

Polyb. Irruption of the Gauls.

It was believed that the Imprecations of this great Man called down the Anger of the Gods, and brought on the bloody War which the Gauls made against the Romans. At least these two Events followed each other fo close, that the People always superstitious, ascribed the Loss of Rome to the Banishment of Camillus.

Appi. in Celt.

Liv. Diod. The first Irruption of the Gauls into Italy, hap-Sicul. Plu. pened in the Reign of Tarquin the Ancient, about the Year of the World Three thousand four hundred and fixteen, and from the Foundation of Rome the hundred and fixty fifth. Ambigatus then reigned over the the whole Celtic Gaul. This Prince finding those great Provinces too much crowded with Inhabitants, fet two of his Nephews, Sigovefus and Bellovefus, at the Head of a flourishing Youth, whom he obliged to look out for new Settlements Abroad: Either that it was the common Custom which was still practifed in the North to the very tenth Century; or that Ambigatus had recourse to these Military Colonies, to get rid of an active, restless, and turbulent Number of Youth: Be this as it will, the Chance of Augury fent Sigovesus beyond the Rhine; where taking his Way thro' the Forest of Hircinia, he opened himse f a Passage by Force of Arms, and possessed himself of Bohemia, and the neighbouring Provinces. Bellovesus turned to Italy, and, after having passed the Alps, the Senones, and People of Mans, who were most numerous in his Army, fettled in those fine Provinces that are between the Mountains of the Alps, those of the Apennine, the River Tesin, and the River Fest, which falls into the Sea on this Side Ancona. There they established themselves, and to them by fome Authors is ascribed the Origin and Foundation of the Cities of Milan, Verona, Padua, Brescia, Como, and feveral other Towns in those Parts, which fubfift at this Day. The first War they had with with the Romans, was about the Year of the World 3616, two hundred Years after their Paffage into Italy. They were then besieging Clusium, a City Clusium of Tuscany. The Inhabitants fearing to fall into the besieged. Hands of these Barbarians implored the Assistance of the Romans, though they had no other Reason to expect it, but that in the last War, they did not take Arms in favour of the Veientes, as most of the other Nations of Hetruria had done. The Senate. who had no particular Alliance with that City, only fent an Embassy of three young Patricians, all three Brothers, and of the Fabian Family, to bringabout an Accommodation between the two Nations. These Ambassadors being arrived at the Camp of Behaviour the Gauls, were conducted into the Council. They man Amoffered the Mediation of Rome, and demanded of baffadors, Brennus, the King or Leader of these Transalpine Year of Gauls, what Pretentions a strange People could Rome have upon Tuscany; or whether they in particular 362. had received any Injury from those of Clusium? Brennus answered proudly, that his Right lay in his Sword, and that all Things belonged to the Brave and Valiant; but that without having Recourse to this primitive Law of Nature, he had a just Complaint against the Clusians, who having much more Lands than they could cultivate, had refused to give him those they left untilled. "They do us (added " he) the fame Wrong that you formerly received " from the Sabines, the Albans, the Fidenates, and " that you now daily fuffer from the Æqui, the " Volsci, and all your Neighbours in general, "whom, Sword in Hand, you deprived of the " best Part of their Territory; therefore cease to " interpose in behalf of the Chusians, for fear your " Example should teach us to defend those whom " you have stripped of their ancient Inheritance. The Fabii, enraged at fo haughty an Answer, diffembled their Resentment; and, under Pretence of wanting to confer with the Magistrates of Clu-

fium, in quality of Mediators, defired Leave to go complain.

into the Town. But they were no fooner there, than instead of acting according to their Character, and performing the Office of Ministers of Peace, these Ambassadors, too young for an Employment that requires the utmost Prudence, suffering themfelves to be carried away by their Courage, and the Fire of Youth, stirred up the Inhabitants to a vigorous Defence. To fet them an Example, they put themselves at their Head in a Sally, and 2. Fabius, the chief of the Embassy, slew with his own Hand one of the principal Captains of the Gauls. Brennus, The Gauls justly provoked at such a Proceeding, acted not like a Barbarian; he fent an Herald to Rome, to demand that those Ambassadors, who had so manifeftly violated the Law of Nations, should be deliver'd up to him; and in case of Refusal, the fame Herald had Orders to declare War against the Romans.

The Herald being come to Rome, and having declared his Message, the Affair was put into Deliberation: The wifest of the Senate were for punishing those who had so manifestly violated the Law of Nations; or at least, for trying to appeale the Gauls with Money. But the youngest of that Body, driven on by their Courage, rejected this Advice, as unworthy of the Roman Name. Affair was referred to the Affembly of the People; and Fabius Ambustus, the Father of those Ambassadors, who, though a Patrician, had found Means to render himself agreeable to the People, made so strong an Interest, that they not only sent back the Herald without Satisfaction, but also chose his Sons Military Tribunes and Leaders of the Army which they resolved to send against the Gauls. Brennus, at the Return of his Herald, removed his Arms and his Resentment from the Clusians to the Romans, and marched directly to Rome. His Army was numerous; all fled before him; the Inhabitants of the Towns and Villages left their Habitations at his Approach;

Brennus marches towards Rome. Year of Rome 363.

Approach; but he stopp'd no where, and declared, his Design was against none but the Romans.

The Military Tribunes marched out of Rome, at Battel of the Head of Forty Thousand Men. Their Troops Allia. were not fewer in number than those of Brennus; but there was more Order and Obedience in the Army of the Gauls. The Roman Generals, fince the Difgrace and Banishment of CAMILLUS, durst not act with full Authority, but were forced to wink at the want of Discipline, and the Licentiousness of their Soldiers, instead of commanding them with that absolute Authority which is requisite in War. It was also observed, That these Tribunes, before they left Rome, did not facrifice to the Gods, and neglected to consult the Auspices; Essential Ceremonies among a People full of Superstition, and that drew their Courage and Confidence from the propitious Signs which the Augurs declared to them. But nothing did more Prejudice to the Romans, than the Multiplicity of their Commanders. There was in their Army Six Military Tribunes, all with equal Authority, most of them young, and Men of more Valour than Capacity. They advanc'd boldly against the Gauls, whom they met near the River Allia, Half a Day's Journey from Rome. Each Nation immediately drew up its Army. The Romans, that they might not be furrounded by the Enemy, extended their Wings, and placed their best Soldiers on the Right and Left, which weaken'd the Centre. It was against this Part that the Gauls bent their chief Forces. They foon pierced and broke the Cohorts of which it confifted. The Two Wings finding themselves cut off from the Army, and their Centre poffes'd by the Enemy, took to Flight, without drawing their Swords. It was not fo much a Battel, as a general Rout; and in this Diforder and Affright, the Soldiers, instead of returning to Rome, (which was but Threescore Stadia off) threw themselves into Veij: Others were drowned, as they endeavoured endeavoured to fwim cross the Tyber: Many, purfued by the Enemy, fell beneath the Sword of the Conqueror. Some few, who escaped their Rage, got to Rome, whither they carried Terror and Consternation. The Senate, thinking the whole Army had been cut to Pieces, and not having Forces fufficient to defend the City, threw into the Capitol all the Men that were fit to bear Arms. They carried into it all the Provisions they could get together; and that they might last the longer, admitted none into Consequenthe Place, but what were capable of defending it. ces of the Most of the old Men, Women and Children, seeing themselves without Governors, or any Scheme to follow, hid themselves in the Fields, and dispersed among the neighbouring Towns. But the old Senators, rather than bear a Load of Misery and feeble old Age among Strangers, refolved to bury themselves under the Ruins of their Country, and to end their Days in a City which they could no longer defend. Several Priefts joined with them, and generously devoted themselves to Death like those illustrious old Men. This Sort of Self-Devotement was a Point of Religion; and the Romans believed, that the voluntary Sacrifice which their Leaders made of their Lives to the Infernal Gods, brought Diforder and Confusion among the Enemy. These venerable Men having put on, some their facred Habits, and some their Consular Robes, and all the Marks of their Dignity, placed themselves at the Doors of their Houses, in Chairs of Ivory, where they expected the Enemy and Death with the greatest Constancy.

Year of Rome, 363. Livy 1. 5. Plut. in Camillo.

Battel of Allia.

Plut. in Cam.

If after the Defeat at Allia, the Gauls had march'd strait to Rome, the Republic had been lost, and the Roman Name extinguish'd. But those Barbarians having fpent almost Three Days in sharing their Booty, the Time they linger'd away in thus enjoying, as it were, the Fruits of their Victory, loft them all the Advantages of it. The Romans, during this Delay, fent away their Wives and Children:

The

The Senators, and all Men that were capable of bearing Arms, retir'd into the Capitol, where they could not easily be forced. Brennus enter'd Rome, Rome and made himself Master of it about the Year 363, taken. from its Foundation. The Gates were open, the Walls without Defence, and the Houses without Inhabitants. This Solitude in a very populous City, made him apprehensive of some Ambush. But as he understood his Trade, and was both a Soldier and a Captain, he immediately secured his Conquest by strong Bodies of Guards, which he set in the public Places and chief Streets.

The first Spectacle that offered it felf to his Sight, and most drew his Attention, were those venerable old Men, who (as we faid before) had devoted themfelves to Death, and who expected it at the Doors Their magnificent Habits, their of their Houses. white Beards, and Air of Greatness and Constancy, the Silence they kept; all this at first surprized the Gauls, and inspired them with the same Respect, as they would have had for fo many Gods. They durft not come near them; but one Soldier, bolder than the rest, having out of Curiosity touch'd the Beard of one of the old Senators, that generous old Man, not being us'd to fuch Familiarity, gave him a Blow on the Head with his Ivory Stick. The Soldier, in Revenge, immediately killed him; and at the fame Time, the other old Men and the Priests were flaughter'd like him in their Chairs. All those In-Senators habitants that had not been able to escape, were put murder'd. to the Sword, without Diffinction of Age or Sex. Brennus then invested the Capitol, and fummon'd those that had shut themselves up in it to surrender: But finding them immoveable, he endeavour'd to fcale the Place. The Romans, who fought with great Advantage, drove back his Troops, and flew a great Number of them. Brennus found he should never be able to take a Place which Nature had fo well fortified, otherwise than by Famine: But in order to be revenged of the Romans for their Resistance, he resolved to destroy Rome entirely. His Soldiers. by his Command, fet Fire to the Houses, demolished the Temples, and public Edifices, and razed the Walls. Thus, instead of a City already famous throughout all Italy, nothing was to be feen, but a few little Hills cover'd with Ruins, and a wide Waste, in which Brennus encamped that Part, of his Army which invested the Capitol: The other Part was fent out to Forage.

These Troops, who imagined they kept the whole Country in Subjection by the mere Terror of their Arms, preserved neither Order nor Discipline in their Marches. The Soldiers rambled different Ways to plunder; and those that kept in a Body, spent whole Days in Drinking: Neither Officer nor Soldier dreamt of any other Enemies, but those who were block'd up in the Capitol.

CAMILLUS, upon his Exile, was retired to Ardea, as we faid before. This great Man, more afflicted at the Calamities of his Country, than at his own Banishment, undertook to revenge her upon those Barbarians. He easily persuaded the Youth comes and of the City to follow him; and, with the Allowance of the Magistrates, he marched out of Ardea in a very dark Night, and furprized the Gauls drowned in Wine. He made a dreadful Slaughter of them; and those that escaped under Shelter of the Night, fell next Day into the Hands of the Peafants, who gave them but small Quarter.

> The News of this Defeat was quickly spread all over Italy. The Romans that had taken Refuge in Veii, and all that were dispersed about in the adjacent Villages, affembled together. There was not one but condemned himself for the Exile of CAMIL-Lus, as if he had been the Author of it; and looking upon that great Man as their last Resource after the Destruction of Rome, they resolved to chuse him for their Leader. "Why, faid they, must "the Ardeates, who are Strangers, cover them-" felves with Glory under the Conduct of CAMIL-

Camillus relieves Rome.

Year of Rome 363.

"Lus, while his own Fellow-Citizens wander about like wretched Out-Laws in the Heart of their own Country?" All are for submitting to him; all are for fighting under his Banners. They prefently send him Deputies, who beseech him to take into his Protection the sugitive Romans, and the Wrecks of the Deseat at Allia.

CAMILLUS at first excused himself from accepting any Command, upon account of his being an Exile. "Rome is no more, answered the Deputies; and we can now no longer reckon ourselves Citizens of a City that is absolutely destroyed. You see before you the mournful Remains of a State, that hath flourished for above three Ages! One fingle Battel hath determined her Fate, and ours; and there is no Afylum left us, but in your Camp.

CAMILLUS, still obedient to the Laws would not yet affent; but made them agree to fend first to Rome, to know whether the Capitol still held out; and in that Case, to take the Orders of the Senate which was there inclosed. The Commission was difficult: The Place was furrounded on every Side by the Enemies Troops. Nevertheless a young Roman, call'd Pontius Cominius, undertook it, and through a Thousand Dangers arrived at the Capitol. The Senate was immediately affembled: This Deputy gave them an Account of CAMILLUS'S Victory, and, on the Part of all the Romans that were dispersed, demanded that great Captain for their General. There was not much Time spent in Year of Debates upon it: The Senate and Soldiers, who re-Rome presented the People, with one Voice, declared him 303. Distator. Pontius was immediately fent away again with the Decree of his Nomination; and that young Man got back to the Camp with the fame good Fortune, with which he had afcended to the Capitol.

CAMILLUS, from Banishment, was raised to the highest Dignity of his Country. He was acknowledged Dictator, and Sovereign Magistrate of the Romans. In any other Captain, this had been but a vain Title: They gave him with this Honour, neither Troops, nor Money to raise any. He made good all these Defects by his Courage, and that great Reputation which he had so justly gained. His new Dignity was no fooner known, but Soldiers flock'd from all Parts to his Camp; and he quickly faw himself at the Head of above forty thousand Romans, or Allies, who all thought themselves invincible under fo great a General.

Some Gaulish Soldiers driven the Capitol.

While he was arming, and taking Measures to raise the Blockade of the Capitol, some Gaulish Soldiers having found in the Mountain whereon that down from Fort is fituated, the Footsteps of Pontius's Passage, made their Report of it to Brennus; who immediately laid a Defign to furprize that Place the fame way. He chose out of his Army such Soldiers as had dwelt in Mountainous Countries, and been accustomed from their Youth to clamber Precipices. These having received their Orders, set out in the Night, under Cover of the Dark, climbed up from Rock to Rock, and with much Difficulty, and more Danger, advanced by Degrees, lending each other a Hand, till they arrived at the Foot of the Wall, which on that Side was built very low, because so craggy a Place seem'd safe from all Attacks.

The Centinel was a fleep, and the Gauls began to scale the Rampart, when some Geese, consecrated to Juno, and which, out of a Principle of Religion, were kept as Sacred Birds, awaked at the Noise the Gauls made, and fell to Cackling. M. Manlius. a Consular Person, starts up at the Noise, runs to the Place, and appears first to defend the Wall. Alone he faces the Enemy; first cuts off the Hand of a Gaul that had raised it to strike him a Blow with his Battle-Axe, and gives another fuch a Shove with his Buckler, that he rowls him from the Top of the Rock to the Bottom. The whole Garrison immediately hastes to the same Place. They push, they press upon the Gauls. Manlius, at the Head of the Romans, tumbles them one over another; it was no Place

Place to fly in; and most of them, to avoid the Sword of the Enemy, throw themselves down the Precipices, so that very few regained their Camp.

The first thing the Besieged did, after having escaped so great a Danger, was to precipitate from the Top of the Rock, the Centinel that had been sound asleep; the next Business was to Reward M. Manlius, who by his Courage and Vigilance had saved the Republick. Each Soldier gave him half a Pound of Meal, and a little Measure of Wine, which they spared out of their own Allowance: A Reward remarkable only upon Account of the Scarcity of Provisions that began to be in the Place. Brennus, despairing to become Master of the Fort any other Ways than by Famine, kept it so strictly invested, that for seven Months that the Siege had lasted, they had not been able to get in the least Supply.

The same Scarcity was felt in the Camp of the Gauls. Since the Dictatorship had been given to Camillus, that skilful General being perfect Master of the Country, posses'd himself of all the Passages. The Gauls durst not stir out to Forage, for fear of being cut to Pieces; so that Brennus, who besieged the Capitol, was besieged himself, and suffer'd the same Inconveniences that he made the Besieg'd suffer.

In this common Misery, the Centinels of the Capitol, and those of the Enemy's Army, began to The Rotalk to one another of an Accommodation. These mans capiDiscourses came by degrees to the Leaders; who tulate. were not averse to it. The Senate, who had heard nothing of Camillus, since they had named him Dictator, and who found themselves hard pinch'd by Hunger, resolved to enter upon a Negotiation. Sulpitius, a Military Tribune, had the Charge of it, and agreed with Brennus to give him a thousand Pound Weight of Gold, provided he would raise the Siege, and depart immediately out of the Dominions minions of the Republic. The Gold was brought, but when it came to be weigh'd, the Gauls made use of False Weights. The Romans cry'd out against this unfair Dealing; but Brennus, instead of redreffing fo plain an Abuse, openly threw into the Scale where the Weights were, his Sword and Belt likewife, and fo overcharg'd it. Sulpitius enraged at fo contemptuous an Infult, ask'd him the meaning of this extraordinary Behaviour: "What should it be, reply'd the Barbarian infolently, but Woe to " the conquered?

The Gauls by Camillus.

During this Contest, CAMILLUS was advanced overcome to the very Gates of Rome with his Army. Being inform'd they were enter'd upon a Conference, he took with him his principal Officers, and with a ftrong Guard resolved to repair to the Place of Conference, to take care of his Country's Interest himfelf; or rather, which is more probable, to show the Deputies of the Befieged, that he was in a Condition to bring them off, and to drive away their Besiegers.

> His Army, by his Command, followed him a flow Pace, and the Gauls, who relied upon the Faith of a Treaty of Peace, fuffer'd the first Body of that

Army to approach without Opposition.

As foon as ever CAMILLUS appear'd in the Affembly, the Deputies of the Senate opened to make room for him, as for the chief Magistrate of the Republic. After having given him an Account of the Treaty they had made with Brennus, they complain'd of the Wrong that Prince did them in the Execution of it: "Carry back this Gold into the Ca-" pitol, fays he to the Deputies; and you Gauls, added he, retire with your Scales and Weights. " It is with Steel alone that the Romans will recover their Country." Brennus surprized at this Greatness of Soul, which he had not found before in any Roman, represented to him that he contravened a Treaty which was concluded. But CAMILLUS replied, " That being Dictator, no body had Autho-" rity to determine any Thing without his Privity." The

The Dispute growing hot, they soon came to Arms. CAMILLUS, who had foreseen it, caused his Troops to advance; the Armies charg'd each other with Fury. The Romans, notwithstanding the Disadvantages of the Place where they fought, drove the Gauls before them. Brennus rallies them, raises the Siege, and encamps fome Miles from Rome. MILLUS follows him with the fame speed, attacks him again, and defeats him: Most of the Gauls were flain upon the Spot, or in the Pursuit, by the Inhabitants of the adjoining Villages.

Thus Rome, which had been taken contrary to all Likelihood, was recover'd by the Valour of a banish'd Man, who facrific'd his Resentment to the Preservation of his Country. And as he saved it in War, and by the Valour of his Arms, he may be faid to have preserved it a second Time in Peace, after he had driven away its Enemies.

The City was destroy'd, the Houses demolish'd, and the Walls raz'd, as we faid before; and a Man might have fought for Rome in the middle of Rome In a Desolation so general, the Tribunes of Camillus it felf. the People renew'd the old Proposal of settling at hinders the Veij, and demanded that the Senate and People should from forremove thither, and make that the Seat of the Em- faking the pire.

They represented in all the Assemblies the extreme Misery of the People, escaped as it were quite naked from Shipwreck, exhausted by so many Missortunes, without Strength, without Money, and unable to rebuild a whole City, which had nothing left of it, but the Ruins; while Veij offer'd the Romans a Place fortify'd by Art and Nature, Stately Buildings, a wholesome Air, and a fruitful Territory.

The Senate, who had made it a Point of their Religion never to leave Rome, made no Opposition to Motives that feem'd fo reasonable, but by Prayers, and foothing Intreaties. The most illustrious of that Body show'd the People the Tombs of their Ancestors; others put them in mind of the Temples D d that that Romulus and Numa had confecrated; and forgot not the Man's Head [Caput in Latin] that had formerly been dug up in making the Foundation of the Capitol, and which, according to the Interpretation of the Augurs, fignified, that the Empire of the World was decreed for that Place, and that it should become as it were the Capital of all Nations.

Year of Rome 364.

CAMILLUS, who alone in this Revolution had more Authority and Credit than the whole Senate, asked some, why they had shut themselves up in the Capitol, and others, why they had fought in the open Field with fo much Bravery to recover Rome if they were refolved to abandon it? " Confider, " faid he, that by retiring to Veij, you will assume " the Name of a conquered People, and lofe that of Romans, together with the glorious Destiny " which the Gods have affixed to it, and which with your Name, will go to the first Barbarians " that shall get Possession of the Capitol, and who " by this Change, may perhaps in Time become " your Mafters, and your Tyrants." These Motives, borrowed from Religion and Glory, touch'd a People, superstitious and haughty, who preferred the future Hopes of Empire to the present Conveniencies of Life; and a Word spoke by Chance, determined them compleatly. The Senate was affembled extraordinarily, to deliberate upon an Affair of fuch Importance. L. Lucretius was to give his Opinion first. Just as that Senator was opening his Mouth to speak his Mind, the Captain that mounted the Guard was heard to call to the Standard-Bearer to stop there, and plant his Ensign: For, added the Officer, here we must stay.

Plut. in vitâ Camil. This Voice, heard at the very Time when every Body was at a Loss what Resolution to take, seemed to come from Heaven: I accept the Omen, cried Lucretius, and adore the Gods, that give us such fortunate Advice. The whole Senate applauded his Words. This News being spread among the People, changed the Disposition of every Mind; and a chance Word, by being turned into an Omen, had more Power than the wisest Reasons the Senate could urge. Veij was no longer mentioned; every Man strove who should build fastest, even without distinguishing his own Ground from that of his Neighbour. The Republic gave a House, situate in the Manlius's Capitol, to M. Manlius, as a Monument of his Va-Reward. lour, and of the Gratitude of his Fellow-Citizens. Fabius ac-But at the same Time that she rewarded so great a cused. Piece of Service, she thought herself obliged to pu-Year of nish Q, Fabius Ambustus, who had violated the Law Rome of Nations, and thereby occasioned the Resentment 364.

C. Martius Rutilus, Tribune of the People, fummoned him before the Affembly of the People, to answer for his Conduct in his Embassy. The Senate, who could not forgive him the Extremity to which he had reduced the Commonwealth, never concern themselves in his Defence; all his Father's power with the People could not save him. His Relations gave out, that a sudden Death had prevented the Decision of this Affair. This was what never fail'd to happen to those who had Courage enough to free themselves from Condemnation and the Shame of public Punishment.

Mean while, those of the Citizens that were still Livy 1. 6. dispersed in the Provinces, thosethat while the Gauls were Masters of Rome, had settled at Veij, or in the Neighbouring Towns, the Priests, the Women, the Children, all return'd to Rome. Every one is looking out for a Place of abode, they build on all sides Rome they were allowed to take stone where-ever they rebuilt could find it. The State surnish'd Tiles; and the Work was carry'd on with so much Diligence, that in less than a Year the City was quite rebuilt.

Rome feemed to rise up out of her Ashes; but Year of scarce did her Inhabitants begin to take Breath, Rome when new Wars called them again into the Field. 365.

The Tuscans, the Æqui, and the Volsci, all near D d 2 Neighbours

Rome wars with her Neighbours.)

Neighbours of Rome, and of Course her Enemies, made a League to oppress her before she had recovered her Strength. The Latins, and Hernici, Allies indeed of the Roman People, but always jealous of her Greatness, engaged in this Design, and furnished their Contingent of Troops. All flattered themselves, that after so many Losses, they should find the City wholly Defenceless. They threw themselves by Consent, and on different Sides, into its Territory; and after having ravaged the Country, they joined their Troops, and marched strait The Military Tribunes were fent out at to Rome. the Head of the Legions, to hinder the Enemy from penetrating farther.

But those Generals, without striking a Blow, suffer'd themselves to be enclosed in Straits and narrow Passages. All they could do, was to gain the Top of the Mountain of Mars, where they intrenched themselves. Their Camp was indeed secure from all Attacks on the Part of the Enemy, but then it was at the same Time inaccessible to Convoys; and the Army was in Danger of perishing by Hunger.

Plut. in Camillo. Camillus again Distator.

In this Extremity they had recourse to a General, always fuperior to Dangers and Difficulties. CA-MILLUS was a third Time named Dictator. Immediately he calls all the Citizens to take Arms, without excepting even the old Men. His very Name, and the Report of his March, filled the Enemy with Terror; they now think no more of Conquest; their whole Study is how to avoid being conquer'd themselves; they intrench themselves in their Camp, which they fortify with a strong Palifade of Stakes, and by felling great Rows of Trees, which they lay before it. CAMILLUS approaches their Camp; and having taken notice of the Dispofition of it, he observed that every Morning there arose a great Wind, which blowed from the Mountains. Upon this Observation he secretly laid the Scheme of his Enterprize; one Part of his Troops made made a false Attack on one Side of the Camp, while on the other, some Soldiers, instructed in their General's Design, threw against that Inclosure of wood, burning Arrows, and other combustible Materials, which with the help of the Wind that rose as usual, quickly burnt down the Palisade. The Fire catches hold of the Tents. The Soldiers, frightned, run precipitately out of the Camp, without staying for the Commands of their Officers. All rush out in Crouds, and in Consusion, and fall into the Hands of the Romans, who make a terrible Slaughter of them. Camillus then sent to extinguish the Flames, in order to save the Booty, with which he rewarded his Army.

The fame good Fortune attended him against the Year of Equi and the Tuscans. He made War upon them Rome almost four Years, sometimes in Quality of Dictator 366. and sometimes of Military Tribune, and in all these Wars he had the same Success, and constantly came off victorious.

But without dwelling upon this Run of glorious Actions which are not to my Purpose; I shall only observe, that it was no less to his Wisdom than his Liv. 1. 6. Valour, that he owed the Title with which his Fel-Plut. in low-Citizens honour'd him, of Restorer of his Coun-Year of try, and second Founder of Rome.

Among all the Romans, there was none but 367.

Marcus Manlius, a confular Person, that differted Manlius from this general Esteem. He was indeed one of Camillus's the bravest Soldiers that Rome ever produced, but Glory. his Ambition and Vanity were yet greater than His Ambition Valour. He could not bear to see Camillus tion. preferred beforehim in the Command of the Armies.

If I had not saved the Fort and Capitol, said he, was it possible for Camillus to have recovered Rome? And does not every Body know that when he drove out the Gauls, he surprized them in a Conference, and at the very Time when they relied upon the Faith of a folemn Treaty?

By fuch Speeches he gave Vent to his Envy, and tried to blacken the Glory of a Man, whom he looked upon as his Rival. The Ambition, which prey'd upon him, being joined to an excessive Vanity, he took the same way that those who affect the Tyranny are used to follow. He set himself to flatter the People as much as any Tribune could have done; and not fatisfied with renewing the dangerous Proposals for the Division of the Lands, the Ground or Pretence of all Seditions, he endeavoured to raise new ones, under colour of an Intention to ease the People, and give them means of discharging the Debts which most of the Plebeians had contracted to rebuild their Houses. He paid for some, and made himself answerable for others. He sold his Land to acquit their Debts; and declared, that fo long as he had a Penny left, he would never fuffer his Fellow-Citizens to be laid in Irons. Sometimes he tore them out of the Hands of their Creditors, and hindered them by Force from carrying them to Prison. By this violent and seditious Behaviour, he had foon got about him a kind of Guard, made up of the People he had so affisted, most of whom had confumed their Substance in Debauchery: These never left him, and raifed a continual Tumult in the Forum.

He represented to them sometimes in publick, and sometimes in private, that the Nobles, not satisfied with being the sole Possessor of the Lands that ought to be equally shared among all the Citizens, had also taken to their own use, the Gold allotted for the Payment of the Gauls, which was raised by the voluntary Contribution of all that had been shut up in the Capitol. He added, that the same Patricians had farther enriched themselves with the Booty sound in the Camp of Brennus, which alone had been sufficient to pay all the People's Debts.

Sedition of This Discourse, repeated upon different Occasithe anons, and artfully sowed about by his Engines, raislian 1 1 1719.

ed the Multitude. All other Pretenfions ceafed; fo great a Prospect as every Man's having his Debts discharged, left them no room to think of any Thing, but to draw these Riches out of the Hands of the Patricians; the Sedition increased from Day to Day, and its Author made it the more formidable. The Senate in this Diforder, refolved to apply to the usual Remedy, and create a Dictator. They made use of the Pretence of a new War with the Volsci. But no Body was ignorant, that that Year of Magistrate would have more dangerous Enemies to Rome deal with in the City than abroad. This Dignity 369. fell to A. Cornelius Cossus, who named Quintius Ca-Liv. 1. 6. pitolinus to be General of the Horse.

The Volsci were defeated; but the Sedition grew greater every Day. The Dictator was obliged to return to Rome. After having agreed with the Senate upon the Course he should steer, he came to the Forum, accompanied by the Senate, and a great Number of Patricians; he mounted his Tribunal, from whence he fent a Lictor to cite Manlius to appear before him.

Manlius finding himself fummoned before the Manlius chief Magistrate of the Republic, made all his Ad-Summoned herents follow him to the Forum, and approached and interthe Dictator's Tribunal with fo numerous a Guard, rogated. that he was able to strike more Terror into his Judges, than he was likely to feel from their Authority. The Senate and People were separated as it were into two different Parties, ready to come to Blows, with each their Leader at their Head.

Then the Dictator having caused Silence to be proclaimed, directed himself to Manlius: " I know, " fays he, that you accuse the chief of the Senate. " of having mifapplied the Gold defign'd for the "Gauls, and the Booty taken in their Camp, and " that you at the fame time give the People hopes " that this one Fund would be fufficient to acquit all " their Debts. I command you to name this Mi-" nute, the Men you charge with having misappli-

Dd 4

" ed this Part of the public Treasure; otherwise,

Livy 1. 6. "to prevent your feducing the People any longer Plut. in by Lies and vain Hopes, I ordain, that you be Camillo. "immediately carried to Prison, as an Incendiary Diod. Sic." and a Slanderer.

Manlius's
Answer.

Manlius, furprized at the stern and imperious Manner in which the Dictator examin'd him, without entering into any Proofs of a Fact of such Importance, replied, That he ask'd him a Question, which he could refolve as well as himfelf; and added, "But is not that which angers you, A. Cor-" nelius, and all the Senators and Patricians in this " Affembly, the Crowd of People wherewith I am " furrounded? Why do you not rob me of this " Affection, which makes you fo jealous? Or at e leaft, why do you not endeavour to share it with me? Relieve the poor Citizens that groan be-" neath the Weight of the Usury that finks them: " Hinder them from being cast into Chains: Take " upon you the Protection of those generous Plebeians, that, by my Example, preserved the Caof pitol: Defend those, that with the Price of their "Blood recover'd the very Spot where now stands " your Tribunal, and the Seat of your Empire: " Pay for some: Answer for others; and you will " fee the Multitude follow you, and give you all the Proofs they are able of their Gratitude and

The Distator replied, That this should not mislead him from his Question: That he commanded him to speak without so many Subterfuges, and name directly those whom he accus'd of having embezzel'd the Gold and Spoils of the Gauls, or else to acknowledge before all the People, that he was no better than a Calumniator. Manlius, perplex'd and confounded, told him, He did not intend to give his Enemies so much Satisfaction.

Upon this, the Dictator commanded him to be led to Prison. The Lictors had no sooner laid hold on him, but Manlius, to stir up the People, invoked all the Gods that were revered in the Capitol, and at Rome: And turning to the Multitude, "Can you bear, O Generous Romans, cried he, to fee your Defender treated so unworthily, by Enemies jea" lous of his Glory?

Notwithstanding his Cries, the Dictator's Order Manlius was executed: He was carried to Prison, and no is fent to body stirr'd to rescue him. His numerous Abettors Prison. contented themselves with showing their Sorrow by Habits of Mourning, which were never worn but in the greatest Calamities. Nay, there were some that would not cut either their Beard or Hair. The Dictator laid down his Dignity, after having had a Triumph for the Victory he had gained over the Volsci. The People express'd nothing but a deep Dejection on that Day of Joy; and they were heard to fay, That the chief Ornament of this stately Triumph was wanting; and that they wonder'd they did not fee in it Manlius laden with Chains, and bound to the Dictator's Chariot. There were even fome, that to move the Multitude, put them in Mind, that Manlius had been fo brave, as alone to defend the whole People against the Gauls; but that among so great a People, not a fingle Man undertook to defend Manlius against the Senate. That it was a Shame to Manlius fee'a Consular treated with so much Indignity: And released. that they ought to break the Chains of the Defender of the public Liberty. The Senate, fearing left the People in their Fury should force open the Prisons. and that Manlius being fet free by fuch violent Means. might carry his Audaciousness further than ever. thought they should stifle this Affair, if they abated a little of their Authority: But instead of laying the Sedition, they, by this timorous Behaviour, gave a Chief to the Mutineers, and a Chief too, enraged by the Shame of his Imprisonment, and incapable of hearkening to Counfels of Moderation.

And indeed, he was no sooner out of Prison, than Excites instead of growing the better for his Disgrace, he fresh Diagain stirr'd up the People to revive their antient Pre-sturbances.

tenfions.

tensions. He spake of nothing in private Assemblies, but the Justice of dividing the public Lands, and the Necessity of establishing an exact Equality among all the Citizens of one and the same Repub-"But you will never bring fo noble an Enteror prize to bear, added he, (addressing himself to "his most devoted Creatures) so long as you oppose the Pride and Avarice of the Patricians only with "Complaints, Murmurs, and empty Discourses. It is Time for you to shake off their Tyranny; to " abolish the Dictatorships and Consulates. Make " yourselves a Head that may govern the Patricians as well as the People. If you judge me worthy of that Honour, the more Power you give me, "the fooner you will be in Possession of the Things " you have fo long wish'd for. I defire Authority " with no View but to make you all Rich and " Happy.

It is faid, that by this feditious Discourse, he meant to instill into his Creatures the Design of restoring the Royalty in his Person. But it is not known what Instruments he intended to make use of in so difficult an Undertaking, nor how far he carried his ambitious Project. What is most certain, is, that he held private Assemblies in his House on the Capitol, to which he called neither A. Manlius, nor T. Manlius, his Brothers, nor any of his Relations; but that on the contrary, no body was seen at them, but People ruined with Debts, or scandalous for their Debauchery.

The Senate, alarm'd at these Cabals, made a Decree, and a Senatusconfultum, whereby the Military Tribunes, who represented the Consuls, were order'd to be particularly watchful, that the Republic received no Damage; a Form which was never used but in the greatest Dangers of the State, and which invested those Magistrates with an Authority little different from that of the Distator. After this, different Means were proposed for breaking the evil Designs of Manlius. Some Senators cried out, That the

Republic,

Republic, upon this Occasion, stood in need of another Servilius Abala, who by one bold Stroke, and the Death of a bad Citizen, restored Peace and Tranquillity.

But M. Menius, and Q. Petillius, though both Accused by Tribunes of the People, offered themselves to the the Tri-Senate, and opened to them a Scheme more fecure and agreeable to the Moderation of that Body. Those two Magistrates, foreseeing that the loss of their Dignities would foon follow that of the public Liberty, represented That in the present Disposition of Mens Minds, they could not attack Manlius with open Force, without engaging the People in his Defence: That Ways of Violence were always dangerous, and might raise a Civil War: That their first Business was to separate the Interests of the People from those of Manlius: That they themselves would undertake to be his Accusers, as of a Man that affected the Tyranny: That the People, from being the Protectors of Manlius, would become his Judge, and an inexorable Judge, when they found an Attempt and Conspiracy was formed against their Liberty: That the Person accused was a Patrician, and Tribunes would be his Accusers. The Senate embraced this Advice; Manlius was cited; and as the Crime alledged against him was capital, he appeared before his Judges cloathed in Mourning. But he -1 came alone; none of his Relations would accompany him, nor concern themselves for his Disgrace: So much did the Love of Liberty, and Fear of being enflaved, prevail in the Hearts of the Romans, over all the Ties of Blood and Nature.

His Accusers charged him with his seditious Discourses; the Alterations he proposed to make in the Defends Government; his ill-meant Liberalities to stir up himself. the Multitude, and the salse Accusation with which he had injured the whole Body of the Senate. Manlius, without entering into a Discussion of these several Articles, gave for Answer a Relation of his Services, and the Testimonies he had received of them from

from his Generals. He produced Bracelets, Javelins, two Crowns of Gold, for having enter'd the first into the Cities of the Enemy by Breach; eight Civic Crowns, for having faved the Lives of fo many Citizens in Battel; and thirty Spoils of Enemies, whom he had flain with his own Hand in fingle Combat: He, at the fame Time, open'd his Bofom, and shew'd it all cover'd with Scars, left by the Wounds he had received in Fight. Laftly, he called upon Jupiter, and the other Gods, for Succour; and turning to the Assembly, he conjured the People to cast their Eyes upon the Capitol, before they condemned him.

The People, touch'd with Compassion by so moving a Spectacle, could not refolve to inflict the utmost Rigor of the Laws upon a Man that had faved the Republic. The Sight of the Capitol where he had fought fo valiantly against the Gauls, weaken'd the Accusation, and drew the Pity of the Multitude. The Tribunes found, that unless they removed the People out of the Sight of that Castle, the Criminal would always have There an Afylum against the strongest Proofs of his Guilt. Thus, for fear he should escape them, they referr'd the Decision of this Affair to another Day, and appointed the Place of the Affembly to be without the Gate Flumentana. Then the Object that had faved him, no longer

Year of Rome 370.

Condemn'd dazzling the Eyes of his Judges, Manlius was condemn'd to be thrown from the Top of the Capitol itself; and the Theatre of his Glory became that of his Punishment and Shame. None of his Family ever afterwards bore the Name of Marcus; his House where he had held his private Cabals, was razed to the Ground; and it was decreed, that no Patrician should afterwards dwell in the Capitol, left the advantageous Situation of a Fortress that commanded the whole City, should suggest and facilitate the Design of enslaving it.

Manlius The People, who pity indifferently all the Unregretted. fortunate, without diftinguishing the Guilty from the Innocent, Innocent, were not long before they regretted Manlius. They had foon forgot his Ambition; they remembred only his Courage and Valour; and efpecially the Adherence he had shown to Their Interests. Those that had received Benefits from him. upbraided the Multitude that their Favourites never lasted long; and that they had always basely yielded them up to the Cruelty of the Senate: That that chief Order could not endure Virtues too conspicuous: That Sp. Cassius, another Consular, who had called them to the Partition of Lands; that Melius, who in a Famine had affifted them so generously, had perished miserably by the Jealousy of the Great; and that by the fame Artifices they had just now destroy'd Manlius, who died only because that noble Citizen would have freed Them from the intolerable Usury with which they were oppressed. The Plague that happened a little while afterwards, did not fail to be ascribed by the meaner Sort to their Punishment of Year of They faid that Jupiter, the Re-Rome that Confular. venger of fuch illustrious Blood, was incenfed at 371. their having fo unjustly put to Death the Defender of his Temple.

New Wars that were fucceffively kindled against the Volsci, the Circai, and the Prenestini, which lasted almost six Years, stifled those popular Notions. Peace bred new Diffentions; as if it had been the Fate of Rome never to preserve Tranquility at home and abroad at the fame Time.

A great Number of Plebeians had diffinguished The Plethemselves in these Wars, and acquired Wealth in beians afthem besides, which gave them further Weight. Confulate. These Plebeians, whose Minds were exalted, thought, it not above them to aspire to the Consulate, and the Command of Armies. To attain these Honours, they infinuated in all the Affemblies, that they should never see Concord perfectly restored in the Commonwealth, fo long as the Dignities were referved to the Patricians only: That Equality was the most solid Foundation of Union; and that Plebeians

beians ought to be admitted into the Consulate indifferently with Patricians: That the Hope of arriving at all the Honours of the Republic, would raise a noble Emulation between the two Orders of the State; and that no Plebeian would then value his Life, when Dignities, Honours, Nobility, and Glory were common among all the Citizens.

The poorer Sort, wholly concerned for the Neceffaries of Life, feemed very little moved with these magnificent Pretensions. The Patricians, on the other Hand, long opposed them with great Courage and Firmness. This was for several Years a continual Subject of Dispute between the Senate and the Tribunes of the People. At length the Tears of a Woman produced what the Eloquence, Interest and Cabals of the Tribunes had not been able to obtain. So true it is, that this artful Sex is never stronger than when it makes use of its own Weakness to effect its Designs. This will appear in the Story we are now to relate.

Liv. 1. 6.

Year of Rome 377. Story of Licinius Stolo and bis Wife.

M. Fabius Ambustus, besides his three Sons, whom we fpoke of upon occasion of the War of the Gauls, had two Daughters; of which the eldest was married to Ser. Sulpitius, a Patrician by Birth, and then Military Tribune; and the younger had espoused a rich Plebeian, named C. LICINIUS One Day, when that Plebeian's Wife was at her Sifter's House, the Lictor that went before Sulpitius at his Return from the Senate, knock'd roughly at the Door with the Staff of the Fasces, to give Notice that the Magistrate was coming in. This extraordinary Noise frighten'd the Wife of LICINIUS. Her Sister took no other Notice of her Concern but by a malicious Smile that feemed to hint at the Inequality of their Conditions. Her Vanity, stung to the Quick by so mortifying a Distinction, threw her into a deep Melancholy. Her Father and Husband often asked her the Occasion of it; but without getting any fatisfactory Answer. She affected to bury the Cause of it in an obstinate Silence.

Silence. Those two Romans, who were extremely fond of her, redoubled their Intreaties, and omitted no Means to draw the Secret from her. At length, after as much Resistance as she thought necessary to increase their Curiosity, she pretended to yield to their Desires; and confessed with Tears in her Eyes, and with a Sort of Consusion, that she should certainly die of Grief, if being of the same Blood as her Sister, her Husband could not attain the same

Dignities as her Brother-in-law.

Fabius and LICINIUS, to comfort her, gave her a folemn Promise, that they would spare no Pains to procure for their Family the fame Honours as the had feen in that of her Sifter; and without lofing Time in making Interest for the Military Tribunate, they boldly aim'd at once at the very Confulship. Her Father, though a Patrician, joined with his Son-in-law; and either out of Complaifance to his Daughter, or Refentment of the Death of his Son, whom the Senate had deferted, enter'd into Measures opposite to those of his own Order. LI-CINIUS and he affociated into their Defign L. Sextius, of a Plebeian Family, equally esteemed for his Valour and his Eloquence, an intrepid Defender of the Privileges of the People; and who, as the very Patricians confess'd, wanted nothing but a more illustrious Birth to capacitate him for the highest Offices of the Republic.

C. LICINIUS and L. SEXTIUS, agreed to get the Plebeian Tribunate first, as a kind of Step to the Supreme Magistracy: This they easily obtained. Scarce had they compassed this first Point, but they resolved to use their utmost Endeavours to make the Consulship common to both Orders of the Republic. To effect this Design, and to prevent the Senate from getting both the Places of the Consulate by their Credit fill'd by Patricians, they formed the Draught of a Law, which decreed that one of those two Places should always be filled with a Plebeian.

Stratagem People to equally with the Nobles.

The business was to bring the whole Body of the of the Tri- People into this Project; which was no easy Matbunes of the ter, the Multitude being much fonder of the Divisimake the on of the Lands, or the Abolition of the Debts, Confulate than of the Confular Dignity, which could never common to affect any but the most powerful of their Order. themselves Thus the two Tribunes agreed to tack these Propofals together, and to carry the Law relating to the Confulate, by Means of that of the Partition of the Lands: They added a third, full as advantageous to the Multitude, for the restraining of Usury. was proposed to deduct from the capital Debt, whatever had been paid for excessive Interest and the Principal was to be discharged in three Years, and by three equal Payments.

The fecond Law related to the Partition of the conquer'd Lands, the perpetual Subject of contest between the Senate and People. But as the Tribunes forefaw that the whole Body of Patricians, and indeed those rich Plebeians too, that had long been in Possession of such Lands, wou'd jointly stand up against their Proposal; and that their Opposition might hinder the passing of the Law concerning the Consulate, they resolved to content themselves with demanding, that at least it should be unlawful for the future, to possess above Five hundred Acres of them, and that those who were found to have more than that, should be deprived of them; to be diftributed among those who enjoy'd no Inheritance in Land.

Lastly, By the third Law, (the only Object those Tribunes had in View,) it was decreed, that Military Tribunes should not be chosen any more; that the Confulate should be restor'd, with all its Prerogatives; and that one of the Confuls should always be taken out of the Body of the Plebeians.

The two Tribunes proposed these Laws in the first Assembly. Never did Division, Cabals, and Intrigues run higher. It was attacking both the Senate and Nobility in all that raises the most violent Defires in Man: Riches and Honour. The whole Body of Patricians declar'd loudly against these Propofals: The People, on their Side, backed their Tribunes with equal Warmth; nay, there were deferters in both Parties. The Rich Plebeian, whose Acquisitions had made the Interest of his Order contrary to his own, fear'd he should be stripped of Part of his Wealth; and the Noble and Patrician that were possessed of no more Land than what was allowed by the Law, stood up for it, in order to make themselves agreeable to the People, and by that means to attain the chief Dignities of the Republic. The City was full of Tumult; Discord reign'd in all Parts of it; even Families were divided among themselves: Every one chose his Party, according to his private Views and Interests; and Rome was in that Agitation which is the usual Forerunner of Seditions and Civil Wars.

nate

Book VII.

The Affembly broke up without coming to any Resolution. The Two Tribunes, who were the Heads of their Party, spent the Interval betwixt that and the next Affembly in Caballing and fecuring the Votes of the Multitude. The Senate, on their Parts, held feveral Councils both in public and private. At length they had Recourse to an Expedient, which had already been of very great Service to them: They gained over fome of the Tribunes of the People. Thefe, being displeased that LICINI-Some of us and Sextius should assume the whole Autho-the Tririty of their College to themselves, gave the Senate thowart private Affurances of their Opposition. LICINIUS their Coland SEXTIUS, who knew nothing of this fecret leagues. Combination, affembled the People, in full Confidence that nothing could prevent the Reception of their Laws: 'They order'd them to be read, and at the fame time invited all the Tribes to give their. Voices. But the Tribunes, who were won over by the Senate, immediately rose, and declar'd, That they opposed it. The VOL I. Ee

The Opposition of one single Tribune was, as we have said before, an invincible Obstacle to any Proposal; and all they had Occasion to say, to hinder the Success of any Affair, was this one Latin word, VETO, I forbid it: A Term so powerful in the Mouth of those Plebeian Magistrates, that without the least reason given for their Opposition, it was equally sufficient to break the Resolutions of the Senate, and the Proposals of the other Tribunes.

Book VII

Thus the Laws were rejected, and the Senate triumph'd; but Sextius, though surprized at the Treachery of his Colleagues, abated nothing of his Boldness; but taking his Resolution in a Moment:

The Gods forbid (said he) that I should violate the noblest Privilege of the People, tho' their

" Magistrates make use of it now against their Interest! But since this Opposition has so much Power, we in our Turn, shall make use of the fame Weapon." Then addressing himself to the Senate and Patricians: "You may call as many "Affemblies as you please, Gentlemen, (added he)

to elect Military Tribunes; you will find that this Word VETO, which is now so agreeable to you in the Mouth of my Colleagues, will not

" please you so well in mine.

These were no empty Threats; for the Time beAnarchy of ing come for the Election of new Military Tribunes, five Years. LICINIUS and SEXTIUS stiffly opposed the proceeding to any Election at all of them; though at the same Time they managed it so well, as to continue themselves in the Plebeian Tribuneship. They renew'd the same Opposition for the five succeeding Years; so that the Republic being without a Head, fell through the Obstinacy of both Parties, into a kind of Anarchy; which was interrupted only by the Creation of some Inter-Kings, who were elected at Times, to try to bring Matters to a Reconciliation.

Tusculum besieged.

Mean time, a foreign War, which seemed to be a less Evil than those domestic Broils, came, as it were, to the Assistance of the Senate. The Inhabitants of Velitræ made Incursions into the Lands of the Republic, and afterwards besieged Tusculum, a City in League with the Roman People. As they could not avoid taking Arms to repel this Insult, the two Tribunes of the People were constrained to wave their Opposition; and they proceeded to the Election of Military Tribunes, to lead their Army into the Field.

The Enemies were beaten, and the Siege of Tufculum raised. Velitræ was afterwards besieged; but that Place not being taken by those that began the Siege, they were obliged to create new Military Tribunes. LICINIUS and SEXTIUS not being able to hinder it, sound Means to get Fabius Ambustus, the Father-in-law of LICINIUS, to be chosen for one of those Magistrates.

These two Men, artful, enterprizing, and sup- The Triported by a Military Tribune, reigned imperiously bunes make in all the Assemblies: They represented to the Peo. new Reple, That in a Republic, the Great Offices should monstranbe the Reward of Merit equally in all, without Distinction of Birth or Riches. And SEXTIUS, who was naturally eloquent, turning to the Senate, and apostrophising the Patricians, asked them sternly, Whether they could not subfift upon five hundred Acres of Land, when their Ancestors had but two Acres allotted them for each Master of a Family, and most of the People had no more even now? "But (adds he) it is this unequal Partition among " the Citizens of one and the fame Republic, which " is the Cause that the People groans under the "Weight of Usury; and that we daily see Men " free-born, lying in Chains, and dragg'd to Jayl " like fo many Slaves. And we must not flatter " ourselves (added he) that the Rich will set any " Bounds to their Avarice, or that the Patricians " will abate any Thing of that tyrannical Domi-" nion which they exercise over our Goods and " Persons, till the People have so much Courage as " to chuse a Conful out of their own Body, who E e 2 may

" may be the Interpreter of their Necessities, and 66 the Protector of their Liberty.

At the same Time that SEXTIUS, by these and the like Discourses, was fomenting the Animosity of the Plebeians against the Senate, his Friends and Adherents gained over his Colleagues, who at length ceased their Opposition. SEXTIUS, having got clear of this Obstacle, convened the Assembly of The Senate, alarmed at this Change the People. in the Tribunes, who broke their Word with them, had Recourse, as in the greatest Dangers of the Rewithfland public, to a Dictator; and all the Senators with an unanimous Voice, bestowed that Dignity upon CAMILLUS. This was the fourth Time he had been invested with it: He accepted not of it now without some Unwillingness. Being indifferent between the Nobility and the People, and folely attached to the whole Body of the Republic, he had been glad to have avoided fiding with either Party; but the Contest was too furious, and the Tribunes too obstinate and hot to be prevailed upon by moderate Counfels. The two Tribunes, fecure of their Colleagues, who had removed their Opposition, thought there was nothing now left to hinder the paffing of their Laws, When the Dictator, to gain Time, published an Order for the Roman People to appear in the Field of Mars, to follow him to War.

This Command of a Magistrate, who had Power of Life and Death over his Fellow-Citizens, caused a great deal of Uneafiness among the People. Tribunes, to give them Courage, had the Boldness to threaten the Dictator, that they would condemn him to a Fine of fifty thousand * Drachmæ, unless he revoked his Edict. But during these Disputes, the Time elapsed; Night came on, and those of the People, who, in spight of the Dictator's Edict, were come to the Affembly with the Tribunes, were made Dictator to the Tribunes. Year of 384.

oblig'd

Rome

* The Greek Drachma was, in value, the same as the Roman Denarius, that is, feven or eight French Sous, according to the most general Opinion.

oblig'd to depart without agreeing upon any Thing; which was the Dictator's chief Aim. He afterwards laid down his Dignity; either because, confidering Year of his great Age, and perhaps still remembring his Rome Exile, he did not care to venture himself again in 385. an Affair of fo much Heat; or, which Livy thinks Liv. 6. the more probable, because he was privately inform- Dec. 1. ed, that there was some Defect in the Form of taking the Auspices at his Creation of Dictator. We have already heard to what a Point of Superstition Religious the Romans, who were then no less ignorant and un-Scruple. polish'd than they were couragious, had carried these scrupulous Observations. If the Augur, in the preparatory Prayers, mistook one single Word for another; if the Veil which covered his Head chanced to fall; or if he himself did not rise or sit down again in his Seat exactly at the Times and Circumflances appointed; the Omission of the least of these Formalities, which might eafily happen in an infinite Number of other Ceremonies, was sufficient to make void all the Deliberations or Elections that were performed in Confequence of this Act of Religion; and a Man that was capable of despising the Auguries, was looked upon as profane and impious. It is not furprizing, therefore, that a Magistrate, for pious as CAMILLUS, should be unwilling to retain any longer a Dignity conferred upon him contrary to the Laws and Notions of his Religion. what would make one believe that he did not abdicate it out of Fear of the Tribunes of the People, is, that foon afterwards he accepted it again, when the Affair of the Consulate was not yet determin'd. Mean time, as the Senate, in fo nice a Conjuncture, knew not how to act without a Dictator, whose Authority might be a Curb upon the Cabals and Intrigues of the Tribunes, they conferr'd that great Dignity on P. Manlius, who, till then, had always P. Manlio feem'd a firm Adherent to the Interests of his Order Diagtor. and Society. But the Choice this Magistrate made of a Plebeian, named C. LICINIUS, for General of E e 3 his Horse, showed his secret Inclination for the Party of the People; though he endeavoured to justify fo extraordinary a Nomination, which, as yet, was without Example, upon Account of the Dignity of Military Tribune, which this C. LICINIUS had before enjoyed; wherein we are to diftinguish him from C. LICINIUS STOLO, who was only Tribune of the People. The Dictator, to excuse himself for making this Choice, alledged some remote Alliance between his Family and that of LICINIUS. Which shows how rarely mutual Fidelity is preserved in the Confusions of the State, because of the secret Ties that there are among the Citizens of one and the fame City, tho' of opposite Parties. SEXTIUS apprehending nothing either from the Dictator, or General of the Horse, was now in Hopes of bringing all his Defigns to a happy Conclusion: He employed his Eloquence in all the Assemblies, to infpire the People with his own Ambition. But the Multitude, who earnestly wished for the Partition of the People Lands, and some Relief in their Debts, seemed but as to the very indifferent as to the Confulate. This generous Consulate. People had a Veneration for the Blood of the Patricians, as the glorious Spring of fo many Generals who had led them to Battel and Conquest.

> The Two Tribunes, alarmed at this Coldness, feigned that they would meddle no longer with any public Affairs: They even jointly refused to concur in the Election that was to be made of new Tribunes for the following Year. Sextius represented in all the Assemblies, that his Colleague and he had grown old in that Office to no Purpose: That it was now nine Years fince they had contended with the Senate for the Good of the People, who were now ready to

of the exasperated Tribunes.

Ambition

Indifference of

Liv. 1. 6. abandon them: That the Plebeians would indeed very gladly come into the Partition of Lands, and were no less eager to be freed of their Debts; but when the Honour of their Magistrates was to be promoted, and the Reward of their Services to be paid, nothing was to be met with but Coldness and Indifference.

And

And now Sextius flinging off the Mask: "Know (says he to the People) that our Proposals are insessed feparable. You must resolve to pass them conjoint-

's ly; and if we do not obtain the Consulate by your Suffrages, you shall have neither conquer'd Lands.

" nor Diminution of your Debts; and I declare, that my Colleague and I will renounce an Office

" from which we reap nothing but Ingratitude,

All the Senators and Patrisians in the Affembly could not enough wonder at the Impudence with which this audacious Tribune made so open a Confession of his ambitious Aims. Appius Claudius, the rear of Grandson of the Decemvir, rising up, and address Rome sing himself to the Multitude: "At least (says he) 385.

you can now no longer doubt that your Tribunes have stirred up all these Seditions for nothing but

"their own Interest. You hear these new Tarquins threaten you without Fear of Punishment, that

" neither You shall have Lands, nor the Republic

" Magistrates, unless the Consulship be yielded to ss them.

The People were very fensible of the Pride and Contempt they showed in this Alternative; but the Business was gone too far: The Multitude, being afraid of losing their Defenders, solemnly engaged themselves to follow their Directions implicitly. It was only upon this Condition, that those Two Magistrates condescended to hold their Tribuneship: And the most ambitious of Men were so artful, as to make a new Merit of the Continuation of their Empire and Dominion.

The Senate and Nobility were confounded at the Boldness of two Men that had got the Secret of perpetuating themselves in two Offices, annual by their Institution, but which they were making Hereditary in their Families. The Senators upbraided each other with their Weakness, and cou'd not, without Indignation, think with what a Decrease of Authority they should leave to their Children the Dignity they had received from their Fathers. The whole

City

Irruption of the Camillus

Dictator

Year of Gauls defeated.

Rome

386.

City was in Motion, and its Inhabitants just upon the Point of taking Arms against each other, when they were obliged to turn them against a Cloud of Gauls, who, from the Shore of the Adriatic Sea, were advancing towards Rome, to revenge the De-

Gauls. feat of their Countrymen.

Enemies fo formidable suspended the Divisions that tore the Commonwealth. It was now no longer time to dispute about the Superiority either of Capacity or Valour between the Patricians and Ple-A common Danger, the furest Test of true beians. Merit, united all their Votes; and the Tribunes of the People demanded Camillus for their Dictator, with as much Eagerness as the Senate. This was the Fifth time that he was raised to this Supreme Post. Victory, under so great a Captain, was neither difficult nor doubtful. The Gauls were defeated; a great Number fell in the Field of Battel; and the rest, being scatter'd by Flight, and unable to rally, were knock'd on the Head by the Peasants. The End of this War was the Beginning of new Troubles at Home, and the old Divisions broke out a-Daringness fresh. LICINIUS and SEXTIUS, those perpetual of the Tri-Tribunes, refolved to carry the Confulate at any rate. gainst Ca. For this Purpose, they convened the Assembly of the People, and, without staying to harangue them A Tumult, as usual, order'd the Votes to be gather'd. The Dictator, who came into the Forum, followed by millus:

Plat. in

the chief Dignity of the Republic, fent a Lictor to feize CAMILLUS, and carry him to Prison. This Camillo. Attempt upon the Sovereign Magistrate, made the whole Nobility rife at once: Rome never faw fo great a Tumult. The Patricians drive back the Lictor, and the Plebeians at the fame time prepare to back him. The two Parties draw up on each fide of the Place, just ready to come to Blows. In this Disorder, the Dictator sends word to the Tribunes to restrain their Animosity for a Moment:

the whole Senate, wou'd have opposed it; but the Tribunes, who now respected neither the Laws, nor

He then calls to him all the Senators, and carries them into a neighbouring Temple, in order to come to some final Resolution. But, before he entred, he Ovid. Fast. turned towards the Capitol, and addressing himself lib. 1. to the Gods, he made a Vow to build a Temple to Plut. in Concord, if he could restore Union among his Fellow-Citizens.

There were strong Debates among the Senators, What they had best to do; but at last, the Danger pressing hard upon them, and the People in their Fury threatning to leave Rome, the more moderate Course, and that which was most suitable to the present state of Things, was resolved on by Plurality of Voices; and they at length consented to grant the People one of the Places in the Consulship: Sex-Aplebeian Tius was the first of the Plebeians that enjoyed it, and Licinius succeeded him shortly afterwards. The Patricians, on their side, by the Interposition of the Dictator, obtained two new Offices peculiar to themselves, exclusive of the People, as it were to make them amends for what they had lost.

The first was the Prætorship, established for the Prætordispensing of Justice in the City: A Function origi-ship creanally Part of the Confulate; but which the Confuls ted. cou'd not always attend the Execution of, especially in the Summer, which they usually spent at the Head of the Armies. Thus the Prætorship was looked upon as a Supplement to the Confulate, and the Second Dignity in the Commonwealth. Sp. Fu-Suidas. rius, the Dictator's Son, was the first Prætor of Rome: and as fuch was allowed the Pratexta, or Robe edged with Purple; the Curule Chair, and Six Lictors bearing Fasces before him: Wherein the Prætor was distinguished from the Conful, who had Twelve. And as the Dictator had the General of the Horse for his Vicegerent, and the Consuls their Lieutenants; the Prætor had the Quæstors particularly under his Direction, and they eased him of Part of his Business.

The Major Edility to created.

The Second Office that was created in Favour of the Patricians, was the Major Ædility, so called, to distinguish it from the Plebeian Ædility, established at the same time as the Tribunes of the People, whose Lieutenants they were looked upon to be. This Office was also called the Curule Ædility, because those who possessed it, were, like the Consuls and Prætors, allowed to be carry'd in a kind of Throne adorned with Ivory, which they called the Curule Chair.

Liv. 1. 7. Plut. in Camillo

The two first Patrician Ædiles were Cn. Quintius Capitolinus, and P. Cornelius Scipio. The Functions of these Ædiles were answerable to those of our Mayors, Lieutenants de Police, and Treasurers of France, all at the same time. They had the Care of the Temples, Theatres, Sports, Games, Public Places, Markets, Tribunals of Justice, and the Repair of the Walls of the City. It was also their Business to take care that no Novelty was introduced in Religion. They had the same Inspection over Books that were published, and Pieces that were written for the Stage: This Post, always filled by two Patricians, was a Step to the Prætorship and Consulate.

At length, after the Establishment of the Confuls, Prætors, and Curule Ædiles, the Law relating to the public Lands was passed, as the only Means to appease the Multitude, and to settle Peace in the State.

This Law, named Licinia, from C. LICINIUS STOLO, its Author, contained, That no Citizen should, upon any Pretence whatsoever, be for the suture possessed of above sive hundred Acres of the conquer'd Lands; and that the rest should either be distributed Gratis, or farmed out at low Rents, among the poor Citizens.

That in this Partition, at least seven Acres should be affigned to each Citizen.

That none should be suffer'd to have upon his Estate above a certain determinate Number of Servants or Slaves, to improve it.

That

That the Number of Cattle should also be limitted proportionably to the Quantity of Land that each Man possessed; and that the Richest should not breed, nor send into the Commons and public Pastures, above a hundred black Cattle, and sive hundred Sheep.

That Three Commissioners should immediately be named to take care of the Execution of the Law, and that the Author who prepar'd it shou'd not be one of those Triumvirs.

Lastly, That the Senate, the Knights, and the People, should take a solemn Oath to observe this Law; and that whoever should break it hereaster, should be fined ten thousand Asses, that is, ten thousand Pence.

The Law was at first observed with great Exactness, as new Regulations generally are. The very Author of the Law, C. LICINIUS STOLO, was the Licinius first Roman fined for Violation of it. He was con-condemn'd victed of poffeffing above a thousand Acres of Land: by bis own And though, to escape the Rigor of the Law, he Law. had before shared them out to his Son, whom he had Emancipated (or, made free) for that very Purpose, this Emancipation was looked upon as nothing but an Evafion of the Law. Half his Lands were taken from him, and divided among the poorer Citizens; he paid, besides, a Fine of ten thousand Pence *; and learnt by his own Experience, That Liv. 1. 7: in a free Government, the People will not bear to c. 9. fee the Magistrates exempt themselves from the Obfervation of the Laws which they prescibe to private Men. But as there are no Penalties fo fevere, which the Avarice of Men will not evade, the Richest and

most

* The Pence of Gold were at the Rate of Seventy-two to the Pound, or Eighty-four Grains Weight, and were current for Forty Denarii of Silver. The Penny of Gold among the Romans was worth a Thousand Sesterces, and each Sestertium was worth a Quarter of their Denarius of Silver.

most Powerful among the Romans afterwards found a way to get the Commons and conquer'd Lands! adjudg'd to themselves under borrow'd Names. The Wars that fell out with the Latins, the Sammites, the Gauls, and the Carthaginians, favour'd these Usurpations; the Laws were less heard amidst the Tumult of Arms; the Magistrates with a mutual Collusion concealed these Infractions; and at last they did not fo much as make the least Mystery of their borrow'd Names, as we shall see by what follows. The Great ones pulled off the Mask, and the Lex Licinia fell at length into Contempt, and the People into Indigence and Mifery.

This was the Cause of New Disturbances, so much the more dangerous as the People were grown more numerous and powerful; and that some great. Men, under pretence of supporting their Interests, made themselves the Heads of Parties. But before I enter into the Particulars of these Diffentions, I thought it would be very necessary to give some account in what manner the Romans extended their Dominion over Italy, Sicily, Spain, and Part of Africk Which I shall relate as briefly as possible, and without flirring from Rome any more than is necessary to give a thorough Knowledge of the several REVOLUTIONS that happen'd in her Government, the main Defign of this Work.

The End of the Seventh Book and First Volume.

